WAR TELEGRAMS.

Battle of Haguenau—Heavy Losses on Both Sides—The French Concentrating for the Defense of Paris—Prussian Accounts of their Victory.

BERLIN, Aug. 7.—King WILLIAM sends the following dispatch to the Queen:

"Good news. A great victory has been won by our FRITZ. God be praised for His mercy. We captured 4,000 prisoners, thirty guns, two standards and six mitrailleurs. MCMAHON, during the fight, was heavily reinforced from the main army. The contest was very severe, and lasted from 11 in the morning until 9 at night, when the French retreated, leaving the field to us. Our losses were heavy."

ANOTHER DISPATCH.

SULTZ, Aug. 7—Morning.—It is reported that Marshal MCMAHON was wounded in the battle of yesterday. We have taken over 4,000 prisoners.

THE PRINCE ROYAL'S REPORT.

MAYENCE, Aug. 7—4 A. M.—The Prince Royal reports, Aug. 6, evening: "In the battle in which we defeated MCMAHON, whose corps had been reinforced by divisions from the corps of FAILLY and CANROBERT, we have taken two eagles, six mitrailleurs, and at least 4,000 prisoners. Gen. BAZE was wounded. The loss was great on both sides."

General Advance of the Prussians—The French Withdrawn Along the Entire Line—Particulars of the Battle at Saarbrucken—Official Reports of the Prussian Officers.

BERLIN, Aug. 7, to NEW-YORK direct.—The following official dispatches have been received here:

MAYENCE, Aug. 6—6:10 P. M.—The French were turned back on their entire line and commenced to retreat toward the interior of France. The French had commenced an advance from Saarbrück, which they had held since the famous battle of three divisions against three companies of Prussians, but having to fall back, they burned that rich and unprotected town, and in withdrawing spread conflagration by throwing hot shot into it.

BEGINNING OF THE PRUSSIAN ADVANCE.

MAYENCE, Aug. 6—9 P. M.—The heads of the Prussian columns approached the Saar on the 5th. This morning Gen. KAMEKE found the enemy to the west of Saarbrücken in strong position in the mountains near Spiehren, and commenced immediately to attack them. Following the sound of the cannon, portions of the divisions of BARNEKOW and STUFFNAGEL came up. Gen. GOEBEN took command and after a very severe fight the position occupied by Gen. FROSSARD was taken by assault. Gen. FRANCOIS and Col. RITZE are among the wounded.

BATTLE OF SAARBRUCKEN.

MAYENCE, Aug. 7—8 A. M.—Gen. GOEBEN reports concerning the fight west of Saarbrücken: "Many hundreds of prisoners were taken. From these we gather that FROSSARD'S corps was engaged. Our forces in the action was four divisions. Night alone put an end to the fighting. The enemy covered his retreat by a heavy fire of artillery. Gen. STEINMETZ arrived in the evening and took command. Gen. FRANCOIS is dead. The loss is heavy on both sides. The number of officers of the enemy killed is especially large."

DISPATCH FROM THE SCENE OF CONFLICT.

SAARBRUCK, Aug. 6—7 P. M.—The town of Saarbrück has just been retaken by the First Prussian Army Corps, under command of Gen. STEINMETZ.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT OF THE FIGHT.

COLOGNE, Aug. 6.—Midnight.—There was a violent combat near Saarbrücken today, commencing at 11 o'clock in the morning, and as 9 to-night it still continued. Our troops repulsed the enemy, who have abandoned the field of battle. We have conquered. Our losses are heavy.

WITHDRAWAL OF THE FRENCH LINE.

BERLIN, Aug. 6, via LONDON—1½ P. M.—The French Emperor has withdrawn his entire line, and is concentrating his troops for the defense of Paris. His losses have been enormous. The Prussians overlook the retreating French forces early on Saturday morning, west of Saarbrück, near the Spicheren hills. Gen. KAMEKE commenced the attack, supported by Gens. BARNAKOW and STUFFNAGEL. Gen. VAN GOEBEN ultimately assumed the command. The action was severe. A position at which the French endeavored to make a stand during their retreat was carried by the Prussians at the point of the bayonet. This battle is known as that of Haguenau.

Gen. Steinmetz's Report of the Battle near Saarbruck.

BERLIN, Aug. 7.—Gen. STEINMETZ telegraphs to Gen. HARTMANN, Chief of Staff at Berlin, as follows: "The conflict between Saarbrück and Forbach was a bloody one, and closed only with nightfall. It was opened by the Fourteenth Division, which was reinforced successively by six battalions, three batteries and some cavalry. We took by assault the heights of Spicheren and flung the enemy back upon Forbach. At the same time the Thirteenth Division advanced on Völklingen, took Fossein, and with its advanced guard reached Forbach toward evening." Another dispatch dated Saarbrück, today noon, says: The result of the fight exceeded our expectations. We have occupied Forbach, where we have surprised the baggage and camp equipage of two divisions.

Napoleon Admits the Retreat of Generals Frossard and McMahon—His Dispatches from Metz—A Proclamation to the French People.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The Journal Officiel, in its second edition of today, publishes the following proclamation:

"FRENCHMEN: Up to this hour we have always given without reserve all the certain news which we have received, and we continue to do so. Last night we received the following dispatches:

METZ, Aug. 6—Midnight.

Marshal MCMAHON has lost a battle. Gen. FROSSARD, on the Saar, has been obliged to retire. His retreat was effected in good order. All can be re-established.

(Signed,) NAPOLEON.

METZ, Aug. 7—3½ A. M.

My communications have been interrupted with Marshal MCMAHON. I am going to place myself in the centre of the position.

NAPOLEON.

METZ, Aug. 7—4½ A. M.

The Major-General of the Army to the Minister of the Interior:

After a series of engagements, in which the enemy brought heavy forces into the field, Marshal MCMAHON was forced to fall back from his first line. The corps of Gen. FROSSARD had to fight yesterday from 2 o'clock in the afternoon with an entire army of the enemy. Having held his position until 6 o'clock, he ordered a retreat, which was made in good order.

(Signed,) LEBOEUF.

Details of our losses are wanting. Our troops are full of elan. The situation is not compromised; but the enemy is on our territory, and a serious effort is necessary. A battle appears imminent. In the presence of this grave news our duty is plain. We appeal to the patriotism and the energy of all. The Chambers have been convoked. We are placing Paris with all possible haste in a state of defense. In order to facilitate the execution of military preparations we declare the capital in a state of siege. There must be no faint-heartedness, no divisions. Our resources are immense. Let us pursue the struggle without flinching, and the country will be saved.

PARIS, the 7th of August, 1870, at 10 P. M.

By order of the Empress Regent.

(Signed,)

M. OLLIVIER, Minister of Justice.
Duke DE GRAMMONT,
Minister of Foreign Affairs.
M. CHEVANDINDE VALDROME,
Minister of the Interior.
M. SEGRIS, Minister of Finances.
Gen. GICOMPTE DE JEAN,
Minister of War ad interim.

French Account of the Battles—Frossard Virtually Surprised—Cavalry Charges at Froschweiler.

METZ, Aug. 7—6:30 A. M.—During the fighting yesterday, the Prussians fired first upon the ambulances at Forbach and set fire to the town. The Third Corps was engaged at Forbach supported by only two divisions from other corps. The corps of Gens. L'ADMIRAULT and FAILLY were not in the fight.

THE DEFEAT OF FROSSARD.

The combat commenced at 1 o'clock, and at first appeared to be of little importance; but soon large masses of troops, hidden in the woods, attempted to turn our position. At 5 o'clock the Prussians appeared as if they had been repulsed, and had given up the attack; but a fresh corps arriving to the assistance of the Prussians from Werdan, Gen. FROSSARD was obliged to retire. Today the troops which got separated yesterday are concentrating around Metz.

THE BATTLE NEAR WORD.

In the battle near Froschweiler, (near Wörd), Marshal MCMAHON had the support of five divisions of Gen. FAILLY'S Corps. After the battle these divisions were unable to join their corps. The details of this battle are still very vague. It is said that many cavalry charges were made, but the Prussians had mitrailleurs (kugelspritzen,) which did us much harm."

Accounts Published in the Journal Officiel—Frossard in Retreat.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The Journal Officiel contains the following dispatches:

METZ, Aug. 6—6:35 P. M.—No further news has been received from Marshal MCMAHON. On the Saar, Gen. FROSSARD'S corps alone has been engaged. The result is still uncertain.

METZ, Aug. 6—11 P. M.—The corps of Gen. FROSSARD is in retreat. Details are wanting.

Marshal McMahon in a Safe Position—Frossard Reported in Paris—The Minister of the Interior to Resign—Concentration of Prussians on the Rhine.

PARIS, Aug. 7—Evening.—Official advices from Metz, Aug. 6, say that Marshal MCMAHON has not had time to send a report. His head-quarters, he simply writes, is in a good position, and he has been joined by another corps d'armée from Metz. The Moniteur du Soir has the following:

"We have received a rumor of an engagement. Gen. FROSSARD is reported to be in Paris. The Minister of the Interior will resign. It is confirmed that there is a heavy concentration of troops of the enemy on the Baden side of the Rhine, which the French watch closely."

The Situation at Metz.

METZ, Aug. 7—8 A. M.—The morale of our troops is excellent this morning. It is impossible to give the exact figures of our losses. Gen. CONVENHENG is organizing defensive measures. The three corps here are still able to give the enemy much trouble, and stop his onward movement.

Advance of the Prussian Head-Quarters.

MAYENCE, Aug. 7.—Prince FREDERICK CHARLES is at Bliesckastle, and Gen. STEINMETZ is between Sulzebach and Saarbrück. The general head-quarters of the armies is now stationed at Kaiserlautern.

Official French Reports of the Situation—A Great Effort of Patriotism Needed—Metz the Head-quarters of the French—Concentration.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The following dispatch has been received:

GENERAL HEAD-QUARTERS,
METZ, Aug. 7—8½ A. M.

That we may hold our position here it is necessary that Paris and France should consent to great efforts of patriotism. Here we lose neither our coolness nor our confidence. But the trial is hard. MACMAHON, after the battle of Kirschochen, (another name for the Battle of Haguenau,) retired at the same time, covering the road to Nancy. The corps of Gen. FROSSARD, which suffered severely, is taking energetic measures for defense. The Major-General is in the front.

CONCENTRATION AT METZ.

GENERAL HEAD-QUARTERS,
METZ, Aug. 7—11 A. M.

The concentration of the troops continues without obstacle. All active hostilities seem to have ceased.

Troops Sent Daily to Aid of Napoleon—Austria an Ally to Germany—Gen. Steinmetz Chief of Staff—Fifteen Days Preparing for a Vigorous Movement.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—I learn on the very best authority that Italy sends 25,000 troops, this week, to the aid of France. And it is believed in official quarters that Austria will also send a contingent at once. In the battle of Haguenau, on the 6th, Gen. COLSON, Gen. MCMAHON'S Chief of Staff, was killed by his side. Gen. RAOULT is wounded. Metz is preparing for a vigorous defense. The Prince Imperial returns to Paris to-night.

Austria's Aid Desired—French Threats in the Event of Success—Prussian Advance from Baden.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—Le Liberté says: A hundred thousand Italians will be fighting with us in a few days, under a treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive. As for Austria, she remains the Austria of 1811. She has sold herself to her enemy, King WILLIAM, for the German subjects which were left her by the treaty of Prague. If victory should crown our arms, France will remember Italy, and she will not forget Austria.... A private dispatch is said to have been received, a dispatch announcing that a corps of Baden troops has crossed the Rhine above Basle.

Excitement at the Bourse in Paris—A Crowd Tear Down the Inclosures—The Bourse Closed by Order—Publication of False News the Cause.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The Press of today says that at the Bourse, yesterday, several persons were arrested. At 2 o'clock shouts of "à bas la Bourse" were uttered by parties exasperated at the dissemination of false news, whereupon an order was given to close the Bourse. The crowd became furious and tore up the railings of the inclosure. Force was brought to bear, and the building was evacuated amid applause from the crowd on the Place outside. A judicial investigation is now going on. Le Liberté publishes the following: "At 1 o'clock today the Bourse was invaded by a crowd maddened with joy and enthusiasm. Immediately the windows in all streets near by were hung with flags on account of a great victory announced to have been gained by Marshal MCMAHON. We managed to get through the crowd to the Bureau of the Commissary of Police, who said he had not received any official news. A few moments after a placard was put up by the Administration, which announced that the corps of Marshal MCMAHON had occupied a strong position, but made no mention of a battle. The Rentes are quoted at 67 francs 10 centimes."

Consternation in Paris on the Situation of McMahon—A Great Battle Imminent—An Appeal to the People to Repel the Invader—Great Losses in the Battle of Haguenau—Peril of Strasbourg—The Legislatif Body to Meet on the 11th.

PARIS, Aug. 7, via LONDON.—A dispatch from the Emperor announcing Marshal MCMAHON'S defeat and separation from the main army, has caused the utmost consternation. According to the Emperor, however, all may yet be retrieved. The Prussians are over the frontier, and are advancing on Paris. The French speak of the great battle as imminent. Le Liberté bids the people of France to rise en masse and repel the invaders.

LOSSES OF M'MAHON'S CORPS.

The dispatch from the Emperor is dated at 3½ A. M., Sunday, and says: "Communication with MCMAHON having been severed, nothing was received from him till last evening. Gen. LEGLE then announced that MCMAHON'S loss was great in the battle, but that his retirement was effected in good order. On the left the action began at about 1 o'clock in the morning, but was not serious until several masses of the enemy had concentrated, before which the Second Corps momentarily held its ground. Between 6 and 7 in the evening the masses of the enemy became more compact, and the Second Corps retired on the heights. To-night all is quiet. I go to the centre of the position."

STRASBOURG MENACED.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—Le Liberté has the following from official sources:

"Gen. FROSSARD has only retreated a short distance. Marshal MCMAHON fought near Niederbron. His head-quarters were at Haguenau, and he has fallen back to St. Averne. Thus Strasbourg is menaced."

THE CHAMBERS CONVENED.

PARIS, Aug. 7, via LONDON.—The Senate and Corps Legislatif have been summoned to meet on Thursday, the 11th inst.

A Proclamation by the Empress—An Appeal for Unity and Order—Paris Considered Safe.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The Empress has issued the following proclamation:

FRENCHMEN: The opening of the war has not been favorable to us. We have suffered a check. Let us be firm under this reverse, and let us hasten to repair it. Let there be but one party in the land—that of France; a single flag—that of the national honor. I come among you, faithful to my mission and duty. You will see me the first in danger to defend the flag of France. I adjure all good citizens to maintain order. To agitate would be to conspire with our enemies.

Done at the Palace of the Tuileries, the 7th day of August, 1870, at 11 o'clock A. M.

(Signed) The Empress Regent, EUGENIE.

DEFENCES OF PARIS.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The Journal Officiel says the defense of Paris is assured. It would require an army of half a million to invest its fortifications, while 30,000 men would suffice to defend them, and there are troops enough now in and around the city to furnish the necessary garrison. Then with the sailors from the fleet which could be procured, the Garde Nationale, the Garde Municipal, and the firemen would make up a solid army of 100,000. Paris is free from danger.

The Prince Imperial Returning to Paris—The Camp Resembling a Court Out of Place.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—La Liberté says: "A special train left the station at 5½ this evening to bring back the Prince Imperial. We have strenuously urged his return, and we are glad that it has been decided upon. In the grave crisis through which we are passing, the enemy should find opposed to him the breasts of men. The camp should no longer resemble a court out of place."

Belgian Neutrality—Attitude of England Approved in Berlin.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The position taken by England in regard to Belgium is approved by Prussia.

Apprehensions for Rome—An Italian Invasion Threatened.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—L'Univers, the ultra-montane organ, sounds an alarm for Rome. It predicts the early invasion of the Papal territory by Italy. It doubts the power of the Italian Government to resist the pressure, even if it wished to, and it does not. Even the moderate people are ignorant on power.

WAR NEWS BY MAIL.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM-SHIP IDAHO.

The steam-ship Idaho, from Liverpool July 27, and Queenstown 28, reached this port late last evening. Her advices are four days later, and are important. We give below her news in detail, briefly outlined in our dispatches heretofore received.

THE SECRET TREATY.

Full Text of the Document—Sentiments in the British Parliament—The Attitude of England.

The following is a translation of this now celebrated document:

DRAGUIN CHEATT.

His Majesty the King of Prussia and His Majesty the Emperor of the French, judging it useful to bind closer the ties of friendship which unite them, and to confirm the relations of good neighborhood which happily exist between the two countries, and being besides convinced that to attain this result, which is, moreover, of a kind to favor the maintenance of the general peace, it is for their interest to come to an understanding on the questions concerning their future relations, have resolved to conclude a treaty to the following effect, and have in consequence nominated as their representatives the following persons, viz.:

His Majesty, &c.
His Majesty, &c.

Who, after exchanging their full powers, which have been found in good and due form, have agreed on the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. His Majesty the Emperor of the French acquiesces in and recognizes the gains made by Prussia in the course of the last war waged by her against Austria and that Power's allies.

ART. 2. His Majesty the King of Prussia engages to facilitate the acquisition by France of Luxemburg, and for this purpose His Majesty will enter into negotiations with His Majesty the King of the Netherlands with the view of inducing him to cede his sovereign rights over the Duchy to the Emperor of the French, on the terms of such compensation as shall be judged adequate or otherwise. The Emperor of the French, on his side, engages to assume whatever pecuniary charges this arrangement may involve.

ART. 3. His Majesty the Emperor of the French shall raise no opposition to a federal union of the Confederation of North Germany with the States of South Germany, excepting Austria, but this federal union may be effected only on the common Parliament, due reservation, however, being made of the sovereignty of the said States.

ART. 4. His Majesty the King of Prussia, on his side, in case His Majesty the Emperor of the French should be led by circumstances to cause his troops to enter Belgium or to conquer it, shall grant armed aid to the latter, and shall support her with all his forces, military and naval, in the face of and against every Power which should, in this eventuality, declare war.

ART. 5. To insure the complete execution of the preceding conditions, His Majesty the King of Prussia and His Majesty the Emperor of the French, construe, by the present treaty, an alliance offensive and defensive, which they solemnly engage to maintain. Their majesties bind themselves, besides and in particular, to observe its terms in all cases when their respective States, the integrity of which is reciprocally guaranteed, may be threatened with attack; and they shall hold themselves bound, in any like conjuncture, to undertake without delay, and under no pretext to decline, whatever military arrangements may be enjoined by their common interest conformably to the terms and provisions above declared.

The secret treaty question again occupied the attention of both Houses of Parliament on the 26th. At 2 o'clock, Mr. GLADSTONE was only able to tell Mr. SAMUELSON that a telegram had been received from Lord A. LOFTUS stating that the treaty was to appear in the Berlin papers yesterday, and that it was said to be in the handwriting of M. BENEDETTI. But at 5 o'clock Earl GRANVILLE, being interrogated by Lord CAIRNS, repeated this information, and added that he had, an hour before, had an interview with M. DE LAVALETTE, the French Minister in London, who had informed him that this "project" originated with Count BISMARCK, and was discussed in conversations with M. BENEDETTI, but that it never had any serious basis, and had been rejected by both parties. M. DE LAVALETTE at the same time reminded him of the declarations which the Emperor of the French had recently made of his intention to respect the neutrality of Belgium, and assured him that those declarations would be binding upon the honor of his Imperial Majesty so long as the neutrality of that Kingdom was respected by the other belligerent. This statement was reported by the Prime Minister shortly before the sitting of the House of Commons was suspended, at 7 o'clock. When the right honorable gentleman arrived at the point of M. DE LAVALETTE'S statement which referred to the friendly feeling which had grown up between France and England of late years, he was interrupted by general cheers; and when he came to the statement that the plan embodied in the project had been originated by M. BISMARCK, there were a good many cries of "Hear, hear."

AMONG THE FRENCH PEOPLE.

Inconveniences of the War—The Proposition to Establish a Paper Currency—Enthusiasm of the People.

The correspondent of the London Times writes from the French Capital on the 25th: In Paris we begin to experience some of the inconveniences of war. People old enough to remember the time when silver was almost the exclusive currency in France, and when, if one drew 1,000 francs at a banker's, he had either to pay a high premium for gold or to carry home the lumbering dollars, will appreciate the inconvenience implied by the announcement that we have returned to very nearly the same state of things. The Bank of France does not make its payments only in silver and paper. Gold is at five per cent. premium at the money-changers'. There is an enormous accumulation of gold in the Bank, but it is not put into circulation. There is fear of its being exported to England in large sums. I hear that a Paris banker has recommended the Government to establish a forced paper currency. The objections to this are obvious, and we have only to look back to 1808 for an example of the evil effects of such a measure. In Italy the compulsory paper was immediately at a heavy discount, while the exchange on foreign countries rose in proportion. The consequence, of course, was that everything brought from abroad rose greatly in price, and this reacted on home produce.

Throughout Italy everything became dearer, and although the premium on gold not long afterward fell to 2 per cent., it has ever since been as low as three per cent. shopkeepers' prices, servants' wages, and in general all the necessaries and luxuries of life have never since fallen again in proportion. A forced paper currency is a real curse to any country, entailing also the same evil immediately on one-half or nearly one-half of the people—the French, miserable little shinplasters; while the local banks issue twenty-cent notes, which do not pass out of their own town or district; for when there is no silver or gold, the copper also disappears.

Meanwhile the Bourse is well supported, confident that we are on the brink of a terrible war, and financial men here speak cheerfully of its prospects. There have been no catastrophes yet, and we are hoping that the next settling day (July 31) will go off as well as the last, when everybody paid up. My own conviction is that there is hardly a moneyed man, a banker, merchant, or tradesman who would not gladly have averted the war, and who would not gladly see the best face on it, and bird themselves up to support the burdens it must inevitably entail. To quote their own proverb, "The wine is drawn and must be drunk," better though the draught may be and more akin to worthwood than to grape juice. One class of persons will feel the pressure of the war more heavily than others—the working classes. A large number of families whose sons are to draw in the next conscription, and who are not disposed to let them serve. A case came to my knowledge two days ago that of a father of many sons, who was in mourning for the loss and who is now dispossessed in him break of those studies and he converted into food for powder. He tells me that if the young man draws a number low enough to husband him in the levy he shall have to pay 5,000 francs for a substitute. The usual price in peace time is about 1,000 francs, or little more.

I see the marine and patriotic fund of France rises high at the present moment, as proved by the fact of 100,000 volunteers having already enrolled themselves. Other proofs are not wanting of a willing determination to make sacrifices in support of the Government and of the war. The percepteur, or chief tax-collector of one of the districts of Paris informs me that all the taxpayers in his district have voluntarily paid up the whole of their taxes for the year 1870, and that many of them have offered to pay immediately those for 1871, if it would be agreeable to the Government.

Public Opinion in the War Sections of France—"La France Must Be and Is United."

The war correspondent of the London Daily News, writing from Metz on the 24th, thus notes the attitude of the population: I have by this time gone through a large section of France—the war section—it is true that having only traveled by rail the view I have had is but as a hasty cutting up this portion of the country; still I find opinions too clearly and evidently marked to make me personally doubtful of the state of public opinion. First—By their officers the war is received as at once their one and as the greatest boon the Emperor could bestow upon them. Second—The soldiers with the colors accept it with enthusiasm, in many cases with pleasure. Third—The reserves who have been cut on unlimited leave take it as a terrible duty which it is their necessity to have to discharge; rapidly their opinions merge in those of their comrades serving with the eagles. Fourth—The upper classes, commercial, educated, &c., all talk of "la France. Now the Prussians must be beaten, how la France should be and is united, how it is a question to close the discussion. This being settled they immediately pull the Government to pieces. "Mexico was the cause of Sadowa; we should have fought in '66; BISMARCK outwitted our Government in '66; the pretext of war is a bad one, we should not have fought until 1871; still the war was inevitable, and la France must be, and is, united." Fifth—The peasantry and the lower classes of Alsace; their attitude is plain and unequivocable; they elect the war; their homes may be burned, their crops and cattle taken by requisitions, although it must be said that they firmly believe this will happen to their German neighbors over the border; still they acclaim the war; they tote the soldiers. Most of them talk German as well as French, to be sure that is not saying much; many of them do not talk French at all; still, as THIERS says, the wise policy of COLBERT has made of them the best Frenchmen in France, and the larger number of the men who speak their own tongue, that fall in the first battle, the better they will be pleased.

PRAYER FOR PRUSSIA.

The Proclamation of King William—The Prayer Inserted in the Liturgy.

The Neue Preussische Kreuz-Zeitung contains the following proclamation of the King of Prussia in reference to the day set apart for prayer:

I am compelled to draw the sword in consequence of wanton attack which must be met with all the strength at the command of [illegible]. It is a great consolation to me, before God and man, that I have not in any way given occasion for the onslaught. My conscience is clear as to the origin of this war, and I am confident before God of the justice of our cause. The conflict is earnest and it will entail heavy sacrifices on my people, and on Germany at large. But I depart for war, looking up to an all-knowing God, and appealing to His all-powerful help. Already I have occasion to thank God that, as the first whisper of war, all German hearts were animated by one feeling—that of indignation at the attack, and of glad confidence that God would grant victory to the righteous cause. My people in this conflict will stand by me as it stood by my father—who now rests in God. With me they will make any sacrifice to restore peace to the nations. From my youth I have learnt to consider it the omnipotence of God's gracious help. In Him I hope, and I call on my people to have the like confidence in Him. I bow before God in acknowledgment of His mercy, and I am convinced that my subjects and my countrymen will do likewise. For this reason I appoint that Wednesday, the 17th of July, be kept as an extraordinary general day of prayer, when divine service shall be celebrated in the churches, and public business shall be suspended in so far as the pressing necessity of the times shall permit. I also appoint that, during the continuance of the war, in every public Divine service prayers shall be offered up that God may lead us to victory, that He may make us merciful even to our enemies, and that He may graciously conduct us to a peace that will secure the honor and the lasting independence of Germany.

BERLIN, July 31, 1870. WILLIAM.

The Superintendent Kirchen Rath, in promulgating the above proclamation, adds the King's command, that on Sunday, the 31st, in all public services, the following prayer shall be inserted in the Liturgy:

Almighty and merciful God! Lord of hosts! we beseech Thee for Thy all-powerful succor for our German Fatherland. Go to war with the German armies and bless their weapons that they may overcome the enemy. Lead us to victory, and grant us mercy, that we may show ourselves to be Christians, even to our enemies. Let us soon make peace that will securely guarantee the honor and independence of Germany. Be the strong protection and defense of our German Fatherland."

FEVER IN IRELAND.

The Fenians and the War—Exciting "Sympathy with France"—Meeting in Dublin.

The speeches delivered at the Dublin "sympathy with France" meeting have caused much conversation in the city, writes the correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette. In addition to the irritation produced by their anti-English and seditious tendency, many persons complain that they will do the country a serious injury by creating a feeling in England that Ireland is again in a disturbed condition, and sending off tourists to Scotland instead. The "Nationalists" are delighted with the success of their demonstrations, which they regard as a victory gained over the Government. The simplest and most correct account of their exploit mentions that the grounds were decorated with flags and banners, chiefly French and American. In the centre was fixed a large France-Irish tricolor. A green flag, bearing on one side the words "God save Ireland," and on the other a harp and Celtic cross, also occupied a prominent position, and close to it was placed the "Stars and Stripes." The attendance was said not to have been less than thirty brass and fife and drum bands on the ground, some of which took up positions under the different banners, and continued to play at intervals the "Marseillaise," and "O'Donnell Aboo," "God save Ireland," and other Irish tunes, the remainder of the bands marched in procession round the field, playing national airs, and followed by crowds of people, who occasionally cheered with great vigor. The address of the supposed French residents, who presented the new drum to the band, had this passage:

Fourteen centuries ago your patron St. Patrick entwined with sanctified hands the shamrock and with the fleur-de-lis of France! In all your struggles the sympathy of France has been with you, and in every age and under every régime France has opened a tearful home to the exiled children of Erin. Your immortal EMMERTH, lying upon a foreign field, caught in his hand the blood as it welled from his breast, and holding it up exclaimed "Would to God that this were for Ireland!" That hero's blood sank into the earth, but was not lost. France answers it, and holds it until she can in return repay by the blood of her children in Ireland's struggle the sacrifices Irishmen have made for France. To French people who have watched events in Ireland it is satisfactory to observe that despite all the efforts of the English Government to crush out the martial spirit of Ireland, still that martial spirit exists unmodified. That Government will never succeed in reducing the subjects by depriving them of the first rights of freemen—the right to possess arms—has signally failed to enslave Ireland, and to suppress the popular will in the expression of sympathy with the struggle for the kindred Celtic military spirit of France. * * * Associations so committed can never be severed. We are one people. We who reside among you feel that we are but a stronger body of Irishmen in the continental climate. We feel, on the contrary, that we are as one people, one race, and that the destinies of France and Ireland, of Frenchmen and Irishmen, are identical. God protect Ireland and France!

The reply contained these words:

We are conscious as you are that all the ingenuity of the English Government is employed to create dissension, and it unhappily finds some Irishmen to become its agents. We are sanguine of the ultimate realization of our hopes. The English Government, as you have observed, strikes at the first principle of freedom by disarming the people. It appeals to the loyalty of the subjects by its fear to intrust weapons into the hands of those it rules; but the more that power attempts to curb our people, the more our people should endeavor to foil its design.

WAR NOTES.

It was reported on the 26th, from Paris, as the belief in authoritative quarters there, that the French fleet would proceed to Copenhagen, take possession of the Danish fleet, or rather press it into the service of France, and then, with this additional force, Denmark's neutrality broken, and with the entire Danish nation supporting the joined fleets repair to Stralsund. Hence it was considered not at all improbable that, as many military authorities have expected lately, the French would make a formidable first attack on their enemy in Pomerania, and at the memorable point where Marshal SAXE met CHARLES XII. The special injunctions to the Paris papers in regard to the Baltic fleet, on which the Siècle made some strong comments to-day, tend to confirm this rumored plan, which, I repeat, I have from an exceptionally good source.

A letter from Hanover, in the Siècle, states that the Prussian Government has removed all the male population from the Isles of Nordernay, Borkum, and Juist, to prevent the French from finding native pilots. The port of Heppens is demanded by the famous Krupp guns which were in the Paris Exhibition of 1867. Throughout all Hanover every one between nineteen and fifty is called to arms.

A correspondent of the Independance Belge states that there have been some lively quarrels between the Zouaves and the Turcos encamped at Strasbourg. The latter have been guilty of positive acts of marauding. The Zouaves have been removed to the camp at St. Avold, where also breaches of discipline have not been rare, owing to the scarcity of provisions and the enormous prices demanded for all articles of consumption in consequence of the sudden arrival of large bodies of men. Several raids have been made upon Prussian villages across the border, but there is no doubt that military order will shortly be restored.

A letter from Florence, in the Indipendenza of Belge of the 26th ult., mentions a rumor that GARIBALDI had offered the Emperor the support of an Italian volunteer legion of which he would have the command. The writer scarcely believes the story, but there is no doubt, he says, that unless France very speedily withdraws the army of occupation from Rome, we shall see a repetition of the attempt of 1867 under circumstances much more favorable to its success. The Indipendance correspondent fully believes the negotiations are in progress for the evacuation of Rome. It has been rumored that Count VITZTHUM, who was always the confidential agent employed between NAPOLEON and VICTOR EMMANUEL, has just arrived at Florence. He is reported to have brought with him an autograph letter from the Emperor to the King, and people will persist in believing that the communication refers to Rome. One thing is certain, (the writer adds,) France is risking a great deal in the way of displeasing the Italian people if she does not embrace the present opportunity to leave Rome. It seems a suggestion has been made that the Romans should be invited to determine by a plebiscitum whether they will keep the Pope or exchange his Holiness for King VICTOR EMMANUEL.

The Brussels correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, writing on the 25th says: The armaments of Antwerp are all but completed. The Grand Duke WLADIMIR, son of the Emperor of Russia, is here at present. In spite of the war and general confusion, the Brussels furnace is progressing. Yesterday we had great fun as the cavalcade went out for the first time. It was unspeakably ludicrous to see the big figures Janucken and Micks, moved by men hidden underneath, dancing before the cavalcade and looking in at all the first floor windows in popular estimation. Curiosity and perspiration were tremendous. All Belgian celebrities, past and present, were represented in the cavalcade, from LAMBERT BALDERIC, Count of Louvain, and his wife ODE, who made Brussels a city in 1046, down to the Prince DE LIGNE. The eight groups of which the cavalcade consisted were: 1. Brussels, represented by a female young girl on a car, surrounded by the industries and arts; 2. Brussels in 1046; 3. The Alliance of the Town of Brabant in 1372; 4. Belgium under the House of Burgundy; 5. In spite of the DUC DE GRAMMONT, CHARLES V., with all his Principalities and Provinces, and all the nations of Belgium, as in his times the trades of the different townships were called; 6. The Belgian nobility of the sixteenth century, with, of course, EGMONT and HORN; 7. The renaissance of industry and arts; and 8. Modern Belgium, represented by a bust of the King, surrounded by representations of the four constitutional liberties. A number of bands and musical societies, each playing and singing tunes of its own, accompanied the cavalcade.

A correspondent of La Patrie, writing from Antwerp, gives his opinion of the value of that great stronghold of national independence. First noticing the disposition of the inhabitants, which he describes as being very friendly and sympathetic toward France, which is ever remembered as a close friend in the annals of the Belgium Kingdom, the correspondent advertes to the fortifications which have been lately completed. Of the immense northern citadel, constructed since 1859, and intended to receive an army of 40,000 men, he simply says it is now unimpregnable. The action of the tide of the Scheldt, upon the sandy soil upon which the citadel is formed is ruinous to the works, and even when a tolerable dry position is for a time obtained it is only by the constant action of pumping machines. This northern citadel has, therefore, says the correspondent, been judged to be useless, and Antwerp is defendable from the Polders. That fact is so far recognized that efforts are now directed to the arming of the southern citadel, created by the Duke of ALBA in 1568, and which is now teeming with troops. The whole of the works surrounding Antwerp are ill-constructed, and, notwithstanding the excellent appearance of their workmanship, the writer has little doubt that in a few years' time they will all crumble away, and if before then they should be exposed to the fire of modern artillery they would be immediately destroyed.

The Neue Preussische Kreuz-Zeitung quotes a declaration of the National Zeitung, to the effect that England is firmly resolved to abandon her neutrality in the event of that of Belgium being molested, and that in such an event she would throw all her power into the scale to preserve the independence of Belgium. "Would!" exclaims the Kreuz-Zeitung, "we call this a miserable consolation. There is danger in delay. Of what avail is this good will to the Belgians now? If Germany is to regain her position of equality on the frontier of Belgium—which God forbid!—if she were beaten—such good will, which takes so long to make up its mind, would certainly be of no service whatever to the Belgians. In that case Englishmen would rather have cause to thank God if they were safe, even in London." To appeals made by Viennese journals to the Bohemians to forget their rancor, and in the present emergency to remember only that they are Austrians, the Czech papers return a very cool reply. The Pokrok, for instance, asks if "the dog is to kiss the stick that beat it," and the Narodni declares that "the Czechs remember what Austria has done for them, and will act accordingly." At such times as these smothered animosities blaze out with a vengeance.

The Dutch papers betray considerable anxiety about the fate of their country in these troublous times, and they are filled with information about their inconsiderable army. The Nieuwe Amsterdamsche Courant, of Monday, contains a glowing account of a review that took place in that pretty little box of toys, the Hague. We are curious to see what the Dutchmen will have to say to the "project of treaty" published by a contemporary last Monday.

"Queen of Canada"—An Opinion About Annexation.

A writer in the Montreal Gazette of the 6th inst. says: "Annexation means civil war—independence means death—as we are means education. We loyal Canadians look forward to complete independence when we are of age, and it is expedient. At present we are in our teens. We don't care what HUSKISSON, GLADSTONE, or any other dead or living Old Country statesmen have said or may say. We look to ourselves and to the Queen of Canada, our most gracious sovereign lady, Queen VICTORIA. We trust in God's good cause, and to our own stout hearts and strong arms, and our kinsmen in the Old Country will not desert us. We are independent of the House of Lords and of the House of Commons of Great Britain and Ireland. Those of us who are not Canadians by birth adopt our country in order to remain subjects of Her Majesty. We will not transfer our allegiance, and we will not be led by selfish, ambitious or designing politicians or rogues. God save our Queen."

The Segar-Willard Fight—Card from Mr. Segar.

In the Washington Star of Saturday Mr. JOSEPH SEGAR endeavors to set himself right with the public in the following card:

"While standing, on yesterday, just outside the door of Mr. PARKER'S book-store, on Seventh-street, where I was making some purchases, a person approached me whom I did not know, but who avowed himself to be a Mr. WILLARD, and the partner of Mr. LINCOLN, whom, the day before, I had chastised. This man WILLARD, without any sort of provocation, grossly insulted me, whereupon I struck at his head with my cane, when Mr. WILLARD ran behind a man of large stature, named POTTER, I am told, and by that refuge escaped the blow aimed at him, which, but for the intervention of the convenient friend of big proportions, would have left him prostrate, perhaps dead, on the pav

GINX'S BABY: HIS BIRTH AND OTHER MISFORTUNES. London: STRAHAN & CO. New-York: GEO. ROUTLEDGE & SONS. 1870.

A satire on the English Poor laws and their practical working, this book contain many suggestions that we, in this country, may also take to heart. Ginx's Baby is not indigenous to St. Giles; we may see him or his double without going further than the Five Points. And the question, what shall be done with this unasked-for and unwelcome waif, flung so recklessly into a sea of misery and poverty and vice, where the strongest can scarcely make head, and the weakest must inevitably go down, is almost as pressing and serious with us as in the birthplace of Ginx's Baby. Almost, not quite, as pressing, for here the demand for labor is and for a long time must be in excess of the supply. So long as we have forests to clear and prairies to cultivate, railroads to build and towns to populate, we shall always know what to do with the material part of Ginx's Baby. But whether we do all that is to be done with his spiritual part this book may aid us to inquire. Perhaps we shall not all agree with the author's prescriptions for alleviating the wretchedness of the class which Ginx's Baby typifies. Compulsory education and restrictive marriage laws, if they be expedient at all, can only be possible in some far distant Utopia, like that of Mr. RUSKIN, where the State is made the universal schoolmaster, and matrimony the chief reward of merit. But even those who differ with the writer will admit the force and clearness with which he has set forth the wrongs and sufferings of the pauper, and indicated the remedies.

In a literary point of view this book is worthy of great praise. The style is exceedingly clear and terse, and the satire is caustic without being bitter. The writer is evidently too much in earnest for that, and his satire is only the natural scorn of a sincere and deeply-moved nature for the imbecility which augments the misery it professes to relieve. The story, though slender, is sufficient to maintain the interest, even of the general reader, to whom a bare political satire would be uninviting. Ginx's Baby is the thirteenth son of a hard-working navvy, whose mental calibre is indicated by his conviction that Government is the Police, and to whom this baby comes as the last feather that shall break his paternal back. He resolves to drown it, but is prevented by an opportune Sister of Misery, who offers to take care of the child, and so carries it off in triumph to the convent. But the notion that her baby may be made "Popish" arouses all Mrs. Ginx's ardent Protestantism—her religion is chiefly comprised in a belief in God, giver of bread, and a hatred of Popery—and through her inflames the zeal of the Protestant Detectoral Association. Application is made for a writ of habeas corpus to rescue this British subject from the machinations of foreign necromancies, and after much litigation decided adversely. But the infant, having polluted the vestments of Father Certificates on the steps of the altar in the midst of a solemn Te Deum for victory, and given other evidences of innate and invincible depravity, is voluntarily surrendered by the good Sisters to the association, which thereupon convenes a crowd mass meeting of Protestants in Philippingman Hall to decide what is to be done with this brand snatched from the burning. The claims of various sects for control of the infant's religious education are amusingly described, and with all that zeal for his spiritual welfare, the baby comes near starving. A fund, however, of £1,360 is collected for his support, of which £1,250 is expended in printing a Daily Bulletin of Health, Life of Ginx's Baby, The Cradle of an Infant Martyr, and other works issued by the Committee, legal and Committee expenses, leaving some £100 for the baby's support. When the fund is exhausted, the Committee, at a loss what to do with him, and presented with a bill for his maintenance, instantly disbands, and the unhappy hero of the tale is abandoned by his nurses and gravitates to the workhouse. Thence, after more litigation between discordant parishes disclaiming his charge, during which the baby is denied food or care by the authorities of the protesting parish on which he is thrown, he is traced again to Ginx. That fond parent, however, disowns him and leaves him on the steps of the Liberal Club. Here, through the influence of Sir Charles Sterling, a kind-hearted and philanthropic member, he is in a measure adopted and suffered to grow up in its servants' hall, in more or less neglect and entire ignorance, until his fifteenth year, when he decamps with certain silver spoons and clothes. From this his descent is rapid through all the grades of misery and vice, in quest of what to do with himself, until at last he settles the great question by coming back to Ginx's opinion and flinging himself into the river.

This is the story; but our brief analysis can give no idea of the mingled humor, and logic, and eloquence, and pathos, with which it is told. We can believe that it created a sensation in England, and if in its political aspect it excites less attention here, its literary and artistic merit will amply repay perusal. The art of political satire had almost been lost from English literature, but the author of Ginx's Baby really seems to wield a pen able to revive it.

PRO ARIS ET FOCIS. By the author of "Waiting for the Verdict." New-York: VIRTUE & YORSTON.

So much nonsense has been written about what is popularly called the "Woman Question" that we are greatly relieved to find a book which has some really sensible arguments to offer on the subject. The writer claims to speak plainly about woman's rights. She deals with the visible and the tangible. No affectation of transcendentalism throws a mist over her pages, but in them the hard facts of social economy and the stern realities of life are boldly met. The writer sets forth that there is much good work to be done by woman, but that, while it is useless to deny that she should be as free to employ her powers of mind and body as man is, woman's first duty lies in the domestic sphere. A complicated civilization has doubtless a tendency to increase the necessity and multiply the occasions for female labor; and it is more than probable that woman in the future will assume a greater number of duties, and more important ones, than those hitherto assigned to her. But it would be well if, in lieu of the interminable discussions by which so much time is wasted, she were to aim at a more perfect accomplishment of the work which nature and social necessity have marked out for her, and endeavor to show that, with the practice of the domestic virtues, she has also a capacity for the performance of work from which she has been heretofore excluded. This book, while it is a beautiful tribute to the purity and elevation of woman, is likewise an appeal to her in defense of the "altars at which our mothers worshiped, and the hearths which they adorned." It is no less a warning to a large sisterhood "to pause and consider ere they stretch forth their hands to desecrate, if not to overthrow, the altars of their land, and with the dust and ashes of their ruins, to put out the last lingering sparks of fire on the hearths of their homes."

DALLAS GALBRAITH. By Mrs. HARMON DAVIS. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO. 1870.

In this her last, and decidedly her best work, Mrs. DAVIS appeals to those readers who have the taste to prefer minute and skillful delineations of character to intricate plot and an accumulation of improbable incidents. The scene of the story is laid in Manasquan, which place appears to be endeared to the memory of the writer, by the recollection of the kindness shown her by its inhabitants. The entire action, however, is not confined to this neighborhood, but some of the best descriptions are bestowed upon the eccentric and often grotesque people whose language and mode of thought are so natural and credible that they seem to have a real existence. The central figure of the story—Dallas Galbraith—is well conceived, bold and impressive; he is throughout an object of sympathy and respect. The most forcible pages in the book are those which describe his conflicts and his sufferings, his generous self-sacrifice, and his painful sense of the injustice of a punishment of five years' duration for the crime of another. That he should thirst for vengeance, and that his soul should be filled with bitterness, is not surprising; but that he should, with dogged persistence, carve out for himself and pursue a career by which the early stain might be washed out, places the character of Dallas in direct contradistinction to that of Laddoun, whom no combination of circumstances, however favorable, could convert into anything but a scoundrel. Mme. Galbraith and Honora are consistently drawn; Mrs. Duffield is a sore trial to our patience, but Lassy is sufficiently interesting and lovable to make amends for the shortcomings of others. There is throughout the book an amount of padding which might with advantage be dispensed with, and which renders the story unnecessarily long.

STERN NECESSITY. A Novel. By F. W. ROBINSON. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS. 1870.

Among the many requirements and virtues attributed to the heroine of this story that of self-control is not numbered. She does not seem to have recognized the stern necessity of mental and moral discipline. In vain is she endowed with beauty, grace and riches; she is decidedly unattractive, and it is impossible for the reader to sympathize with her in carrying out her schemes, or to feel a lively interest in the loves and disappointments of a being who recognizes no law but her own will. Her kindness at the beginning of the story to poor Jenny is very touching, and holds out a promise which is not fulfilled; for Maud grows hard and relentless before we part with her. Some of the early scenes with Mr. Spanswick are well described, although highly improbable, while those in which Miss Day and Guzzy Edwards appear are totally untrue to the life they ostensibly represent. The story belongs neither to the domestic nor the sensational school, but partakes of the least attractive attributes of both. It is, to be brief, dreary and uninteresting. The plot—so far as it goes, and there is not much of it—is not bad; neither is it good; but much time is wasted in describing people and incidents which have little or nothing to do with the narrative, and being wholly superfluous, the interminable tediousness of these supernumerary characters becomes irksome beyond measure. The author of Christie's Faith is capable of better work than this.

THE HISTORY OF HORTENSE. By JOHN S. C. ABBOTT. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS, 1870.

To the History of Hortense and the work of rehabilitation undertaken in her favor, Mr. ABBOTT has added that of her illustrious mother, as well as of several other members of her family; and, in order to give a correct picture of the times, his narrative goes back as far as the first dawn of the French Revolution, during which eventful period the father of HORTENSE, like many others of his class, paid the penalty of being born noble. As a memoir illustrative of public transactions the book augments the materials for history; as a biography it undertakes to redeem the character of HORTENSE from the painful imputations which some writers have given of her. New light is thrown upon the circumstances of her marriage with LOUIS, afterward King of Holland. The scandalous motives hitherto assigned for the hasty step which NAPOLEON and JOSEPHINE concluded this marriage are directly contradicted by Mr. ABBOTT, who is borne out in his statements by the writings of the EX-KING himself. LOUIS was extremely averse to the connection, and perhaps no two persons were ever united who felt a more lively resentment of the horrors of an unwilling and ill-assorted union. All the circumstances of JOSEPHINE'S divorce are minutely related, and her letters, as well as those of the Emperor, lend a deep interest to the history of this remarkable family. For the rest the narrative is sufficiently circumstantial to satisfy our desire for knowledge, and minister to our love of amusement. The correspondence with which it is interspersed gives to some parts almost the liveliness of a clever fiction, wherein the principal personages, by a series of letters, at once tell their own story and develop their own characters and feelings. Some characteristic letters from the present Emperor to his mother are included in the volume.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF FREDERICK W. ROBERTSON, M. A. Edited by STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M. A. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS. 1870.

Gifted with rare eloquence, a liberal heart, and large intelligence, Mr. ROBERTSON not only contributed the influence of his words and writings to the cause of religion and morality, but that of his character also. Endowed with an acuteness which could penetrate every subject, with a nicety and exactness of discrimination which enabled him to convey to the mind with perspicuity the most remote differences, he unfolded the truths of Christianity in a manner which appealed to hearers of all classes and degrees. Mr. ROBERTSON represents the transition period of the theological movement of this century in England, but his writings—unlike those of many learned controversialists—are not calculated to bewilder minds inferior to his own. The problems he examines are sometimes as subtle as they are elevated, but his language is remarkable for its simplicity and for the avoidance of anything obscure. His discourses and lectures are, in their way, models of biblical interpretation. Those contained in the present volume on the Epistles to the Corinthians show a mind at once salient and reverential. They convey a deep and serious intention, through an honest explicitness tending to sustain the indisputable authority of Holy Scripture in matters of religious belief. In the discourses of Mr. ROBERTSON the religious man will find the constituents of a faith which will at once satisfy his conscience and afford him a stay and consolation in the hour of trial. The importance of his subjects, and the manner in which they are treated, must not be judged by the fragments which we are enabled to give, but we select one which appears to be peculiarly characteristic of this eminent writer's mode of thought. It establishes his manner of arriving at a conviction of the divinity of Christ, the belief in which he fears to be waning among us:

"See Him as He was. Breathe His spirit. After that try to comprehend His life. Enter in His childhood. Feel with Him when He looked round about Him in anger. When He vindicated the crushed woman from the powerful venom of her ferocious accusers, when He stood alone in the solitary majesty of Truth in Pilate's judgment hall, when the lights of the Roman soldiers' torches flashed on Kedron in the dark night, and He knew that watching was too late; when His heart-strings gave way upon the cross. Walk with Him through the marriage feast. See how the sick and weary came to Him instinctively; how men, when they saw Him, felt their sin, they knew not why, and fell at His feet; how guilt unconsciously revealed itself and all that was good in men was drawn out, and they became higher than themselves in His presence. Realize this life with Him, till He becomes a living, thorough-ever present. And you will find a reverence growing up which compares with nothing else in human feeling. You will feel that a slighting word spoken of Him wounds with a dart more sharp than personal insult. You will feel that to bow at the name of Jesus is no form at will of others, but a relief and welcome. And if it should ever chance that, finding yourself thrown upon your own self, and cut off from sects—suspected in quest of a truth which no man gives—then that wondrous sense of strength and friendship comes—the being alone with Christ, with the strength of a manner independence."

Mr. BROOKE, whose endeavor is to present the distinguished preacher to the light merit grateful recognition.

New Music.

—ERNST REINKING publishes "Esquisse de Masourka," by CHARLES PRADEL. It is a brilliant composition, and will, no doubt, be appreciated by admirers of this pleasing composer.

—W. A. FOND has issued "Pippin Lancers," by OPERTI, which is full of bright, sparkling melodies, pleasant to the ear, easy to the touch and well adapted for dance music. The same composer also sends a graceful little song, "Golden Tresses," embellished with a fine treatise portrait of Miss MARKHAM.

—WM. HALL & SON have sent out the "Reception Redowa," by Miss HELEN ESCOTT. A light, pleasing melody, rather superior to the general tone of such productions, and, as the work of a young composer evincing some talent, well-phrased and original. "Lorena Mazurka," from the same publishers, by GUSTAVE LAVALLEE, is a graceful arrangement, and for the average pianist a suitable study.

ILLINOIS.

The Political Campaign Opening—Republican Congressional Nominations—The Democrats—A Temperance Sister Thinks—Chance-Making on a Large Scale—Divorce Mill in the Chicago Courts—Miscellaneous.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Saturday, Aug. 6, 1870.

Politics are beginning to get interesting again. As the next Legislature re-districts the State, it is a matter of some little importance to the parties as to which shall elect a majority. The new Constitution, however, will prevent any very extensive "gerrymandering," yet there is room for the dominant party to reap some advantage. The principal interest centres around the candidates for Congress. They have already had a heated and protracted contest in the Eighth District, which has resulted in the selection of a candidate who was the choice of but a small minority in the District. But the fight had become so warm between the friends of CULLOM and Gen. MCNULTA, that it was problematical if either could have been elected, had he been nominated. The contest was more between McLean County and Sangamon than between individuals. The nominee is a fair man, but of medium ability. In the Seventh District Col. MOORE was renominated without much difficulty, though the old member, Mr. BROMWELL, made considerable effort to carry the Convention. There is some trouble in the Fifth District. Mr. INGERSOLL seeks a renomination, and is quite strongly opposed by Gen. CARR, of Galesburg. The Central Committee, instead of calling a convention, have designated a day for a test ballot—the candidate receiving a plurality to be declared the nominee. There is much dissatisfaction at this, and a convention is to be called outside and independent of the Committee. Rev. W. L. BALDS, an able and popular Universalist clergyman, is talked of as a people's and temperance candidate. He would make a strong run. There was a prospect a while ago of strong opposition to COOK in the Sixth District. Hon. FRANKLIN CORWIN proposed to contest the Republican nomination; but finding that the "sitting member" has the inside track, he has withdrawn. Since the death of Hon. L. S. CHURCH we do not hear much from the Second District. The chances are now more favorable to Gen. FARNSWORTH being returned, though there is strong opposition to him. In this district, I notice that Mr. JUDD has commenced the preliminaries of the canvass—which, in Chicago, consists in going round among the saloons and drinking lager or whisky with every bibulous sovereign one meets. After a week's practice the candidate's face resembles a pickled beet, and Mr. JUDD is already taking on a color which, were he a meerschaum—instead of being a meerschaum—would delight the heart of its owner. The Democrats have held a Convention in the Tenth District, and, contrary to pretty general expectation, have nominated Hon. E. Y. RICE, of Montgomery. It was thought that Judge WOODSON, the ablest Democrat of the district, was sure of a majority in the Convention. As it is, the change is an improvement. Mr. RICE is a man of fair ability, and a fair man. The Temperance Party are reorganizing, and propose to make a full canvass in this State this Fall. A State Convention for consultation has just closed a three days' session in Bloomington. It was resolved to nominate candidates for all the offices to be elected in this State, including members of Congress. A nominating Convention has been called for Aug. 31 by the State Central Committee. This is also to be held in Bloomington. Col. G. W. MINIER, of Tazewell County, has already received and accepted the nomination in the Eighth District, where CULLOM has just made such a desperate fight for a renomination by the Republicans. So there is prospect for a triangular fight all over the State. If the Temperance men get organized, they will poll quite a large vote.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

Within the past five years the farmers of Northern Illinois have gone quite largely into the making of cheese on the factory plan. There are now in the County of Kane alone twenty-three factories, having a capital of about $300,000, and using the milk of about 9,500 cows. They will produce nearly 4,000,000 pounds of cheese this season. There is quite a number of these institutions in all the northern counties, and since they went into operation the character of Western cheese has been greatly improved. The effect has been, however, to enhance the price of butter and to encroach upon our supply of milk, as a large portion of that used for city consumption came from Kane County.

VARIOUS MATTERS.

The internal revenue collected in this city during the month of July was quite large—amounting to $671,310. The source from which it was derived is not, however, very flattering to our legitimate business, as $207,946 came from whisky, $20,600 from beer, and $75,069 from tobacco.....The number of fires in the city during July was sixty-six, and the losses only $62,429, which was more than covered by insurance. Fifteen of these were caused by the careless use of fireworks on the Fourth of July, and twenty-one were incendiary fires.....The weather continues warm and oppressive, though the thermometer has ranged several degrees this week below last.....Divorces are flourishing, although from an agreement entered into by our daily papers, but little publicity is given to them. On Tuesday of this week forty-one cases were disposed of by default, and twenty-two after a contest. But I presume this was "divorce day" in the courts.....Dr. FULTON, of Boston, preached his much-abused "Dickens' sermon" to an audience of two or three thousand in Tarwall Hall, last Sabbath afternoon. As a matter of course, there was a divided sentiment in relation to it. The religious portion of the community approved of the doctrine, but many of them doubted the propriety and good taste of some portions of it, which were personal to Mr. DICKENS.....An effort is being made here to organize an Irish colony for Dakota. Colonies appear to be the order of the day. Gen. SALOMON, the new Governor of Washington Territory, took out one composed of between two and three hundred Germans.....Our new constitution goes into operation on Monday. It makes quite a number of changes in our local judiciary. Justices of the Peace are hereafter to be chosen in this city by the Circuit Judges.....Money is reported easy at the banks; but business collections are very hard to be made, and much embarrassment is the result. Trade is fair. A large Fall trade is anticipated, on account of the bounteous harvest.

THE ACCIDENT TO LADY THORN.—The Rochester Chronicle, of the 6th inst., says: We are sorry that our Buffalo friends will be disappointed, but Lady Thorn will be kept where she is until it is perfectly safe to move her, and then she will be taken East. It is suggested by horsemen, who ought to know, that the injuries to Lady Thorn are not of a nature to impair her valuable qualities. She is a "pin-fetcher," and simply fractured the nose and the off fore leg. The latter injury, in the opinion that there is a close analogy between the fracture of that with which many ball-players are familiar, who have received sharp blows on the finger-ends—a light injury, providing the tissues and ligaments are permitted to restore themselves, as they undoubtedly will in a brief time.

CURRENT NOTES.

The coal-beds of Illinois are about to be developed.

A new Jewish congregation was organized at Troy last week, with Brother HERMAN RAPHAEL as President.

The City of New Sweden, in Maine, was taken possession of recently by fifty Swedish families.

The name of BENJAMIN YOUNG appears among the contributors to the Exhibition of Textile Fabrics at Indianapolis.

An exchange states that a gentleman of Kingston, in this State, has imported Irish swallows at a cost of $1,000.

St. Joseph, Mo., is represented to be a "big city" from the fact that a child was lost there last week, and could not be found for two hours.

The New-Jersey papers are discussing the new patent recently issued to the Orange man in this city. The good story has been transferred to New-York.

ANNIE ROONEY, a nine-year old girl, of Quincy, Ill., recently died in great suffering from the effects of a recent accident caused by a needle having accidentally run into her left breast.

Mr. CHARLES F. NORTON, one of the oldest and most successful coal merchants of Philadelphia, died on Thursday last. He had been engaged in the coal trade for twenty-five years.

The report that a man named CHESTER had been devoured by hogs in Indiana, has been contradicted. The gentleman himself declares that there is no truth in it, and he ought to know.

A California paper says that rains have set in in good earnest throughout that State, and that the promise for abundant crops is quite encouraging.

Miss JESSIE MARLEY, a young lady residing near Albany, recently saved the life of a young Jerseyman, named LYON, during a boating excursion on Lake Champlain.

The last surviving member of a consumptive family at Lowell, Mich., is said to have recently attempted to cure himself by roasting the heart and liver of a sister lately deceased, and inhaling the fumes.

Some comfort may be taken from the announcement, which comes to us from Philadelphia, to the effect that the buyers of that city have decided that small leaves shall in future be sold at wholesale for three and a half cents, and large leaves at seven cents.

Mrs. JULIA MOSNY, a suffering female of Troy, N. Y., has commenced a suit against that city to recover $10,000 damages for injuries received last Winter, through having fallen upon some ice left in the way by the carelessness of public servants.

The wife of an Albany miser recently discovered the place where her husband had been in the habit of secreting his money, and helped herself liberally. The husband caused her arrest, but the Justice refused to take a complaint, she had been reduced to a state of starvation when the money was found.

A marriage was recently prevented at Lewiston, Me., by the arrest of the intended bridegroom just as he was in the act of repeating the words "for richer, for poorer, in sickness, &c." The bride fainted, the wedding breakfast spoiled, and the parents of the bride returned to their home in a high state of indignation.

A gentleman who lost his wife at Niles, Mich., recently, repaired to South Bend, Ind., in quest of her, but not finding the lady there engaged rooms at the hotel, with the intention of waiting until she appears. He is certain that she will endeavor to procure a divorce, and is determined to have the start of her.

A man named SAVAGE, who has a local habitation in the eastern part of Ohio, is charged with keeping wild beasts in cages exposed to the heat of the sun. The poor animals are compelled to remain standing or lying down, and are not supplied with water. Such cruelty is, indeed, worthy of a "Savage."

The editor of the Duluth Minnesotian announces his appointment as Surveyor of Customs for the port of Duluth in a manner quite original. He says: "The documents have been received by which THOMAS FOSTER, the editor of this paper, is officially notified that he has been appointed and confirmed Surveyor of Customs for the port of Duluth. If now any body knows any good reason why we should accept, he will please state it immediately, or forever after hold his peace."

THE COMING CONTEST.

Vice-President Colfax on the Situation—The Expectations of the Democracy—Defense of Congress—Statement of the Work of the Republican Party.

No one can shut his eyes to the fact that the Democratic leaders enter upon the contest just opening for the control of the next House of Representatives with more confidently-expressed hopes of victory than for many years past; and it is timely at this moment to examine into the grounds of these sanguine expectations. They can be summed up as follows:

They have dwarfed, if not ignored, the differences existing in their own ranks on funding the debt, and how it should be paid, its taxation, &c., on which so many prominent Eastern Democrats disagree so radically with their brethren in the West. They have hopes that, reconstructive legislation having been virtually completed, the new issues as to the finances, the tariff, internal taxation, and foreign policy may tend to the disintegration, and thus weaken the powerful, hitherto compact and invincible Republican phalanx. They draw encouragement, too, from dissections as to patronage; and the fact that victory for ten consecutive years, embracing three Presidential contests, tends to weaken a party so long in power, giving its opponents more opportunities for attack. But their hardest hope is in the severe and sweeping criticisms of Congress, during the recent session, by prominent and influential Republican papers, editors and correspondents permanently alienating tens of thousands, as they trust, and thus, in their theory to correct reverses between Presidential majorities, to be paid into a minority, ready to be overthrown by the united forces of the Democracy, energized now by their long exile from power and animated by the zeal and confidence with which they are preparing for the contest.

If needs, however, only thorough unity, an energy worthy of their principles, and a zeal akin to that which has given them so many brilliant victories, to enable the Republicans to baffle all these hopes, as they have baffled them before, and to place their flag again in triumph on the Capitol. Contests in which our opponents opened more hopefully than now have resulted in their defeat. Even the Congressional contest of 1862, when the Democracy carried every Northern State from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, was swept for the right by unexpected victories in the Border States of the South. And the greater contest of 1864, when, after after the renomination of President LINCOLN, disaffection in our ranks led to a rival National convention and nomination, and hope to August seemed possible, was, by the energy and unity of the succeeding months, converted at last into the most magnificent political and national victory ever won in this country.

It is easy to criticise Congress—easy, it is popular—but the fact remains the same, and can be substantiated, when Mr. JOHNSON was President, caused these criticisms to be suspended after the issue was clearly manifest to the people; for they realized then, as never before, the value and the power of that Congress. But, with their danger removed, its recovery again, with increased vehemence to criticism so marked among the independent thinkers, and never to be deprecated except when carried to excess, to review sharply and complainingly the action or non-action of those in power. Let us look calmly at some of these complaints.

All through the session there was fault-finding at the differences in Congress as to financial plans, and their failure to agree till near the period of adjournment. Bating these differences, be it remembered, the Republican majority exactly represented the people behind them. Take one hundred of the leading Republican papers of the nation, from Maine to California, lead Wilson and Boring, and you would find precisely the same conflict of opinions. Nay, more, assemble at that time one hundred of the leading Republicans of any State, and insist that they should agree on a specific financial plan, and you would have found the same divergence in their views. What was finally agreed on, after months of debate and comparison of plans, I will briefly allude to hereafter.

While the appropriation bills were passing through the two branches of Congress [illegible] ple were almost [illegible] believe that the Senate especially would [illegible] them down with almost innumerable [illegible], if not profligate, expenditures. The [illegible] of the House, Executive and Judicial [illegible] were specially cut, several articles [illegible] left will remember. What were they? A [illegible] dozen, on which there would be party [illegible] in the Senate, and which were [illegible] abandoned at the [illegible] of the House, embraced such items as the extension of the Capitol grounds a new State Department, which is now occupying a former orphan asylum, not fire-proof; and the increase of the salaries of United States Judges.

The Supreme Judges receiving now $6,500 per year less than the Cabinet and $4,000 per year less than the Police Justices of New-York City. Nearly all the remainder of these multitudinous amendments, about "the wisdom of which the Senate" so much was said, related to the clerical force of the departments, the Sub-Treasuries, Custom-houses, &c. The House had retrenched on all of them severely. The Senate preferred to follow the estimates of the Administration. And, after nearly every item in the House bill, involving one or more items of the kind, the number of formal amendments needed to bring up the curtailed House bill to the official estimates seemed extraordinary. It may add that in the Conference Committee on account of the views of the two Houses was settled compromises were mostly made by the House yielding. Many similar changes could be easily pointed out.

From these criticisms, also, vast numbers of the people doubtless inferred that lobbyists for railroad, &c., had triumphed as never before. Whereas, [illegible] of $2,000,000 [illegible] was found that appropriations [illegible] were [illegible] $1,200,000,000 per year, a river and Harbor Improvement bill of $2,000,000 (less than one-half of one per cent.), and both of these had been usual under all Administrations. And [illegible] bills which had passed the Senate all failed in the House except two—the Supplemental North Pacific, and also through a country [illegible] and mainly unsettled from Portland, Oregon, to Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia River.

Let us now [illegible] the brief review of the strictures to which I have alluded, to an equally abbreviated statement of what has been done by the Republican Administration and Congress for which it deserves well of the country.

1. Reconstruction. When Congress convened, last December, four of the insurrectionary States were still excluded from representation. There is now not a single State excluded from full relations to the Government. When it adjourned, in July, they were all restored, and every star on our banner was behind a State.

2. The Fifteenth Amendment. Not only was this irrevocable guarantee of equal rights and self-protection enshrined in our National Constitution, but the most powerful legislation against the bitterest opposition to establish the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments against all who would seek to nullify or violate them.

3. The National Revenue. The fidelity of the Administration in collecting the revenues is signally illustrated by a comparison whose figures are more impressive and conclusive than the most pointed arguments. Gen. GRANT, in his first sixteen months of service, (from March 4, 1869, to July 1, 1870,) collected $262,806,735 more internal revenue than was collected in the last sixteen months of Mr. JOHNSON'S service, (from Nov. 1, 1867, to March 4, 1869,) no taxes having been increased during Gen. GRANT'S term, and the same assessors, collectors, &c., and [illegible] same laws to collect under. During the same sixteen months, Gen. GRANT'S officers collected $79,861,196 of duties under the tariff more than Mr. JOHNSON'S officers collected during his closing sixteen months. When this gain of fifty-one millions is called the new year is [illegible] given to the [illegible] and collectors had to be confirmed by a Republican Senate under JOHNSON'S Administration. The reply to this is obvious. Saying nothing of the officers who changed their politics with him, and who, being already in office, were beyond the power of the Senate; but [illegible] could remove to one and often two [illegible] the best they could get from him; and that, besides, the inspectors, weighers, gaugers, &c., were not within their control at all.

4. The Debt. The few millions of the national debt paid during the last sixteen months of Mr. JOHNSON'S term will be remembered, and the contrast between the sixteen months and the $140,000,000 paid by President GRANT during his first sixteen months rebukes all who hold that the national debt, as the cost of our national existence, must be paid to the uttermost farthing. Not so rapidly, it may be hoped, in the future; but that each year shall see its volume and its burdens materially reduced is certain.

5. Retrenchment. In every department there have been large reductions demanded. The [illegible] force in Washington has been reduced by the thousand, every year finding it smaller. The large force of civilians in the employ of the Quartermaster's Bureau has been steadily curtailed, devolving their work, as far as possible, on soldiers. The army has been ordered to be reduced, and the large surplus of officers are to be mustered out. The grades of General and Lieutenant-General, created by the war, are to cease when vacancies occur in them. The Major-Generals are to be reduced to three, and the Brigadiers to six, as vacancies occur. And, after this year, four millions per annum will be saved by the [illegible] reconstruction of the tariff bill, without impairing its efficiency. Thus, with honest collections, the destruction of the whisky rings (relieving the honest tax-payer from bearing his own burdens and the burden of the dishonest besides), with economy in expenses, with retrenchments in every branch, with the appropriation bills for the future below the estimates, with the national credit maintained, and with the national debt steadily diminishing, Republicans have no cause to fear an appeal from them to the country.

6. Reduction in Taxes and Taxes. Secure in this healthy financial result, the Republicans in Congress were able to pass a bill, for which the Democracy refused to vote, reducing the burdens of internal and external taxation in the aggregate about eighty millions per year. In changing the duty on Bessemer steel rails from ad valorem to a specific (that is, from a per cent. on value to a fixed amount) a slight apparent increase has caused them to be denounced. Without arguing the point, for I have desired to state facts rather than to argue them, a word of explanation may not be amiss. Ad valorem duties give high duties when goods are cheap, and low duties when they are dear, consumers as well as producers, to know precisely how much duties are to be paid, irrespective of fluctuations in cost. When Bessemer steel rails, then a new invention, were taxed forty-five per cent. ad valorem, under the tariff, their cost was about $100 per ton. The duties, therefore, amounted to over $60 per ton. Increased production and competition on both sides of the ocean brought the price down to $100, $80, $60, and finally to about $50 per ton. The last Congress made the duty on them hereafter specific (as it is on tea, coffee, sugar, &c.), and fixed it at one and a quarter cents per pound, or $28 per ton. This would be less than twenty per cent. on their price when first introduced into use; and would, if they rose to over $60 per ton, be a less rate than the fluctuating ad valorem duty which it superseded. But, without claiming this every feature of this bill is exactly and absolutely correct, for no tax bill in all its details ever fully satisfied all who voted for it or support it, its great leading objects commend it to all who feel the burdens of taxation. All the vexatious special internal taxes are swept away after this year. The tax on gross receipts of railroads, steamboats, &c., on incomes, which increased the rate of travel and freight, is also abolished. The income tax is reduced one-half—from five per cent. to two and a half—limited to two years, and the exemption raised from $1,000 to $2,000. As the amounts paid for rent, taxes, &c., are also deducted, the burden of it is lifted from all whose annual incomes are below about $2,500, and those persons whose incomes are below the exemption are relieved from the necessity of furnishing detailed statements of their means hereafter. So that our internal taxation hereafter is to be mainly on luxuries, realized wealth, and large incomes. Many articles used as raw materials by home manufactures are placed on the free list of the tariff, with hundreds of others which did not pay the expenses of the collection. Pig-iron, the basis of all manufactures of iron, is reduced from $9 to $7 per ton. And coffee, tea and sugar have had nearly half their tariff duties abolished after this year, relieving the daily expenses of all in limited circumstances. Although this last reduction curtails the revenue $14,000,000 per year on sugar, $9,000,000 on coffee, and $3,000,000 on tea, for the benefit of those to whom these articles have become necessaries, and who use proportionately, nearly as much of them as the rich, I regret that the bill which enacted it failed to receive the Democratic vote.

7. Funding. Congress also passed, over the opposition of the Democratic members, a bill for funding the national debt, on which six per cent. interest is now paid, into bonds to run thirty, fifteen, and ten years respectively, at four, four and a half and five per cent. interest, saving, if all are refunded, twenty-six millions of interest per year. The gain in gold occasioned by the war may refund this desired consummation; but, if our arguments remind the new rates of interest as too high and too liberal, their capitalists have an excellent opportunity now to avail themselves of them.

8. Increased Banking Circulation. Without inflating the currency, but at the same time saving nearly a million and a half of interest per year to the Treasury on $45,000,000 of three per cent. certificates, Congress authorized $54,000,000 of additional circulation to the South and West, which had now less than their share of national bank circulation.

9. Pensioners. A much-desired change was effected by Congress in providing for the payment to all pensioners quarterly hereafter, instead of semi-annually, and in checks sent to their homes, the Government paying all the expense of the necessary [illegible] thereby avoiding the frauds, their pensions, as has been the practice hitherto in all our history. And, as the artificial limbs supplied to our crippled soldiers wear out, on an average, in five years, new sets are to be furnished them every five years, or the money value thereof, if they are unable to use them.

10. Peace. Despite our strong and undisguised sympathy with all who struggle for liberty and self-government, we have been fortunately preserved from any embroilments abroad, from war or entangling alliances, as well as from the [illegible] Indian war on the Plains—leaving our [illegible] of development to progress unchecked, our national wealth to increase, our national [illegible] and muscle to handle the plow rather than the sword, our national debt to diminish, and, till the [illegible] war disturbed the money markets of the world, gold to steadily settle downward till within nearly ten per cent. of par.

I must not trespass further on your space. The picture thus imperfectly presented is one of which none need be ashamed. The Republican Party represents the power, growth, progress, development, and humane and liberal ideas of the American people. Every lover of liberty and human rights throughout the world sympathizes with it. Millions at home as well as abroad rejoice over its triumphs as are saddened over its reverses. Unity in its ranks guarantees the one; dissensions and divisions hasten the other. Grave will be the responsibility on any whose course should bring to it defeat instead of victory.—The Independent.

HOT CORN.

Where it Comes From, What Eats it and How it should be Eaten—Its Connection with Patriotism, and the Preservation of Free Government.

Once upon a time an American tourist, while wandering by the lakes and valleys of the "forties" and tried wines of Ireland, charged to meet one of her unsophisticated sons, from whom he sought information as to some of the wizard mysteries which tradition has associated with the "Isle of Saints." Thither, after supplied with all the learning he possessed, and, by nature, became naturally anxious to know something of that land, the old land, whither so many of his countrymen had escaped from poverty, misfortune and a cow-ey for potatoes. His first inquiry at the stranger was, if he knew his cousin Pat Lanigan, to which he received a response in the negative. Recovering partially from the surprise which this (to him) inexplicable ignorance inspired, he ventured, with a somewhat incredulous air to further inquire, "Have ye any praties in Amurikay?" "Yes," was the reply. "An tabacky?" he added, with newly-aroused interest. "Yes," was the reply again. "An phisky?" he continued, with growing enthusiasm. "Yes," was still the welcome response. With an impressive waive of the hand, indicating satisfied curiosity, Pat exclaimed, "That's enough; that's enough, now. Praties and tabacky and phisky is more enough for any countthry." When Pat Mullcahey (for such according to authentic history was his name) thus expressed his enthusiastic admiration for the country that could produce potatoes, tobacco and whisky, he little dreamed that the broad fields and early garden plots of that same land held a monopoly almost against the world in the production of corn, which, when subjected to the culinary process, and with the addition of a little butter, salt and pepper, formed an edible whose luciousness would cause him to lick his lips from his nose to the point of his chin, while beneath the shade of the broad green leaves of the stalk on which it grows, he might sit on a Summer's day with his collcen, and, unobserved, enjoy a "smush" as long and sweet as that which fired the ambitious heart of CONOLANUS. But Pat has since joined his cousin in the land "where dogs run loose and paving stones are chained," and many a time has he smoothed down a palate, ruffled by hard whisky, with a well-greased ear of juicy hot corn. As to the precise time when the early unripened corn was adopted as a summer luxury of the table, history is silent; but it may be that, after the manner of the original constitution, which left posterity to infer that the "peculiar institution" had never existed, no history has left us to assume that hot corn has always been an institution of America. Certain it is, that it has been common among us since a time when the memory of the oldest inhabitant runneth not to the contrary; and, doubtless, old King POWHATAN himself, and that other venerable chief who was dethroned by Gov. JOHNSON in the valley of the Mohawk, despoiled in their day, without compunction or conscience, many a well-laden cob. From that time to this, hot corn has kept steady pace with the settlement and civilization of this continent, until now, in every State of the Union, from the frozen Kennebec to the luxuriant banks of the Willamette, it has become a cherished part of our domestic economy. The statistics of the country are somewhat unreliable as to

SOUTHERN POLITICS.

Address of the Conservative State Central Committee of Virginia.

The following are the main features of an address to the people of Virginia, just published by the Conservative State Central Committee:

The Conservative members of the Legislature have in conference resolved that the organization of the Conservative Party, maintained during the last Gubernatorial canvass, be revived and perfected for action in the approaching Fall elections, and to that end have constituted "The Central Executive Committee of the State of Virginia," to continue in office until superseded by a regular Convention of the people. In assuming its responsible duties, the Committee deems the occasion suitable for some brief reflections on the condition and future prospects of the Conservative Party.

In the chart laid down for the Committee, it will be seen that no new political combinations are considered, nor is any new political policy avowed. We only resume the work of the Conservative organization as it was in 1869, and seek to perfect it. The opening days of the past year were heavy indeed for our beloved State. Thick gloom covered her like the pall thrown over the dead. Turn where the eye would, "darkness was on the face of the deep." Military power was supreme. Her Government had been stricken from existence, and by the blow, as by the shock of paralysis, her very sentient life seemed suspended. Her sovereignty, which for centuries had bound up in auspicious union the blessings of freedom, law and order, had been suffered to pass into a new body politic—her former slaves, allied with a set of wretched adventurers, seeking profit from their ignorance and suggested crimes. A convention, sprung from this source, and duly representing all had decreed the abolition of slavery, one of her white population. Taxation secured in such hands would have been organized robbery, and government itself a standing conspiracy against the public peace. Civil law, which for a time had been permitted to speak with bated breath, was now wholly silenced. All the officers of the State, elected or appointed by the will of the people, went out of their offices at a fixed day, and the people were thus left without law, because without officers to execute the law.

But with the incoming of a new Administration a new policy toward the States then excluded from the Union and lying under military restrictions, was inaugurated. Congress had already declared the opinion that these States were entitled to be restored to civil government and to readmission into the Union. His special and first message to Congress held out the first sign of conciliation—the first olive branch over the yet unabsolved waters of civil strife. It recognized the political enfranchisement of the negro, (now an "accomplished fact in all the States,) but to the whites was yielded the opportunity to secure for themselves the control of the State forever—the power to levy and expend its revenues, to provide for it wholesome laws, to develop its resources, and to change, if so advised, its organic law. A convention of the members of the Conservative organization as embled in April, 1869, under these novel circumstances, greatly changed from those which attended the original delegation of its power. The notable characteristic of its action was its total abnegation of authority to decide upon the new and momentous questions which confronted it. The Convention felt that it no longer represented the sentiment of unconditional opposition to the Constitution, for it could not be blind to the growing inclination of the popular mind to accept it in its proposed altered form. The triumph of conservatism in Virginia is no exception to the general law. It has not, in some unexplained way, relieved the people from the pressure of debt, nor repaired as by miracle the desolations of war. It has not, unaided, built up our delicate and varied industries, nor the hidden wealth of the field, the forest, and the mine. But we were strangely insensible not to acknowledge such blessings as the restoration of civil law in the place of irresponsible military power; the pure and equal administration of justice by Judges of our own selection; the reign of order; the enactment of laws and their enforcement by a Legislature and Executive freely elected; in a word, the autonomy of a self-governing people. "The State judicial power," it is proclaimed, "though in the hands of energetic, learned, and upright men, has not been able to bring criminals to punishment" upon a false and shameless pretence whole counties are declared to be in a state of "insurrection, and are overrun by military violence—thus confounding all inhabitants, men, women and children, in one indiscriminate and lawless proscription. Habeas corpus is stricken down in the tents of the Constitution, and the traffic in Governor and corrupt Judge colludes to deny its benefits to the people. We feel for these, our unhappy brethren, with our hearts. We pray God to hold up their hands in the contest with their terrible enemy. But let us also lay the warning to heart. What better or more would have been the condition of this Virginia people, had the conservatism failed in the great struggle in which their all was imperiled, and what fate is now in reserve for them should its efforts be relaxed? In reviewing our situation, as it was and as it is, simple justice requires us to acknowledge our obligation to the executive and the Legislature of our choice for the capacity, integrity, and zeal with which they have discharged their arduous and responsible duties. Rarely have public representatives been placed in situations so novel and difficult. There was not the common easy route through ways made smooth by the feet of precedent and custom, but rather the rough course of the woodman, who, ax in hand, blazes his way through the trackless, unbroken forest. In the ordeal through which the State passed again into the Union (involving the attempted exaction of the test-oath from the Legislature) in resisting the reenactment of military authority in the organization of government under the Enabling act; in prudent and sagacious recommendations to the Legislature and sound views of State policy; in the just and constitutional construction of the novel power of the veto; in the humane yet firm and considerate exercise of the power of pardon, as in the general administration of his office, the Executive has fully met the expectations and redeemed the confidence of those who placed him in power. In the composition of the Legislature, the prevailing political disqualifications have allowed the renewal of election, that there were necessarily many members who were young or untried in the forms and functions of legislation. But they quickly mastered the difficulties of their situation. Zeal, energy and conscientiousness marked their deliberations; in which some, before unknown in public life, appear with ability and promise of high distinction and usefulness in the future councils of the State.

Charged with the duty of promoting the efficiency of our organization, we warn you carnestly that what we have achieved by such arduous labor must be maintained by equally enduring and persistent effort. The most dangerous and fatal delusion must be avoided of underrating the vigor and resources of a beaten adversary; for the Radical Party was beaten, not conquered, last year. We have "scotched the snake, not killed it." Figures show (in round numbers) that of the 191,000 votes cast for WELLS for Governor, 97,000 were colored votes, solidly cast, leaving about 5,000 whites as the "Republican Party," so called; for the poor negroes were the "unpaid capital" with which they boasted they would begin the canvass, and with which they hoped to disfranchise and despoil the white populations of the State. And the calculation is still with the enemy. This scheme will be steadily pursued in every county, town and township to organize this vote, and cast it in compact mass in the elections.

It is further recommended by the conference that suitable nominations be made for representatives of the State in Congress. These cannot be made with accuracy in the present territory, until, by redistricting the State, the gross inequalities of the present arrangement shall be redressed. But attention will naturally be directed to such men as will worthily represent the State. Virginia owed her former weight in the councils of the country to the disinterested patriotism and exalted character, no less than the political ability, which distinguished her representatives. By no other means can any share of that influence be regained. With such aid, the favorable regard of Congress may be asked to the relief of the great staple—tobacco—from ruinous specific taxation, and those galling and oppressive restrictions which depress and deter the fair dealer, while they tempt the unfair to fraudulent evasion.

Thus have we discharged the representative duty of recommending for Virginia a State policy, free from outside influence or intervention, the prime condition of a just and conservation of the power of the State in conservative hands, and between which and social anarchy and misrule we discern no alternative.

The Fat Men—Clam-Bake at Norwalk, Conn.

The New-Haven Palladium of the 5th inst. says:

One of the largest gatherings of fat men that has assembled since the organization of the Fat Men's Association, assembled at Gregory's Point, Norwalk, on Thursday. Most of the party from this vicinity went down on the 9½ A. M. train. On arriving at Norwalk carriages were in waiting to convey the weighty visitors to their destination, which they soon reached and were welcomed by BANFORD SHOLES, Proprietor of Gregory Point House. A large mammoth tent was erected on the grounds, under which tables were arranged for dinner. As fast as the members arrived they were invited to step upon the scales and be weighed, the Secretary, Mr. MAPLES, of Westport, taking an account of the weight of each one; those who turned the scales at 300 were declared members of the Association. Dinner was announced at 1 o'clock, and the way clams, oysters, fish, corn, &c., disappeared was astonishing. Landlord SHOLES was equal to the emergency, however, and had provided the following amount of eatables for his hungry visitors: 225 bushels of round clams, fifty bushels of oysters, twenty bushels of sweet corn, 500 pounds of fish and ten barrels of sweet potatoes and other vegetables. The number present was about 1,000, from all parts of the country. Ninety persons present came up to the standard of 200 pounds, the aggregate weight of which was 21,181 pounds, the average weight to each person being about 235 pounds. The weightiest man in the party was AUBREY WARLOCK, of New-York, who weighed 423 pounds. I. EMERSON, of Bridgeport, came next, weighing 395. The heaviest man from this city were not present. If they had been, one of them—Alderman STEVENS—would have been elected President, as he probably weighs more than any one that was present. The combined weight of C. W. BEADLEY, wife and son, of the Florence House, was 705 pounds.

THE CENSUS-TAKER IN AFRICA.

A Few Facts About our Colored Citizens—How They Compare with Whites of the Same Class—Their Desire for Knowledge, &c.

The enumeration of the colored population of the City has presented features that only go to prove what has been frequently urged in their favor. A careful observation of about 150 of these people up-town has developed the following facts: That they are not behind other classes of citizens in average intelligence; that they have a strong desire to better their intellectual condition, which is evidenced by the fact, that all among them, even the poorest, seem to be determined to secure to their offspring the advantages of schooling—many families keeping their children at school until they arrive at ages when white families of like pecuniary status take them away to make them contribute to the general support; that they are proud of what educational advantages they may possess; that the majority of them can read, and that a very large percentage can write. Cases of gross ignorance are exceptional among them. A colony of fifty of them people had the odds of comparison strongly in their favor, as against a like number of whites in their immediate neighborhood. To any one who will recall the ignorance of these people ten years ago, even in our own section of the country, a remarkable degree of intellectual progress cannot fail to be noticed among them.

The adult males are proud of, and seem to highly value their new-found privileges under the Fifteenth Amendment. No skilled mechanics were found among them by the census-taker, their occupations being generally house-servants, public waiters, laborers, boot-blacks and whitewashers. Among the females were found many dress-makers, school-teachers and seamstresses. Their interiors were invariably clean, and, in a conversation with the agent of some houses where a number of them resided, the census-taker was informed that they were good tenants, were on the best of terms with the white people around them, and were generally regarded in the locality as good neighbors. Much has been written about the negro servants' propensity to imitate or ape the manners and language of his superiors. This propensity was shown to the census-taker the other day in its ludicrous aspect, in the family of a gentleman of "sable hue," living up-town. The gentleman in question held a position of which the emoluments enabled him to live in a style that outstripped the humble professions of his neighbors, and led the census-taker to rank him as one of the "blooded aristocrats" of his race. That part of the "style" mentioned that extended to the furniture and ornaments of the apartment where the census was taken was, it was necessarily inferred, of the most requirements of refined taste, well calculated to attract the attention and invite comparison with other interiors—such comparison resulting in the trading of the bull outlines that govern the adornment of the homes of the wealthy whites. Red, white and sky-blue upholstering, and a profusion of gilt ornaments of gilt increased the walls and furniture. Ottomans and easy-chairs were in the ascendant, showing that our friend had at least a single eye to comfort. A guitar was in one corner, and a banjo in the other. Gaudily-bound books covered the centre-table, while the blank space around the room were hung with landscape and marine views, that left an impression on the mind of the observer that from the recklessly extravagant use of two colors in one case the painters were either "green" in their profession, or, in the other, those "artist's souls" were continually wandering to the "blue ethereal." The whole arrangement of the interior presented a picture that, in its general aspects, was like unto the amateurish copy of some warmly tinted original. The observation required to arrive at this conclusion was made during the delay attendant upon the appearance of the master of the house, who, after keeping the census-taker in waiting for a long time when in contemplation, entered the room, a calico morning-gown gracefully disposed over his person, and with an air of pompously inquired the nature of his business.

Census-taker—I am taking the census, and wish to ask the necessary questions.

Colored Individual—Of course I can give you all the information that is required, Sah; we are four in family, me and my wife and two children. Is this for the Directory?

Census-taker—No, Sir, for the census.

Colored Individual—Ah, I see; well, that is all (preparing to retire.)

Census-taker—What is your name?

Colored Individual—Am I to answer dis question? (Nodding an answer.) My name is AUGUSTUS ——; my wife and children's are &c., &c.

Census-taker—How old?

Colored Individual—Dat is a question dat I can answer for myself, but in the case of my wife I shall have to give de information Mrs —— (he called, and that lady appeared from an inner room) dis gentleman wants to know how old you are. After some hesitation the age of the lady was obtained, and afterward the children's.

Census-taker—Your occupation?

Colored Individual—Dat is to say what I am now at de present time occupied in doing?

Census-taker—Precisely.

Colored Individual—It is not for the Directory?

It is for the census, replied the census-taker, who was somewhat nonplussed in keeping a variety of subjects distinct, that he did not know what was precisely meant by the "census."

Colored Individual—Ah! I see. Well, at de present time I have charge of —— Club.

Census-taker—Do you mean that you have charge of the Club or of the Club-rooms?

Colored Individual—Well, of de rooms, I suppose you might say; but it dawn in charge of de rooms.

The census-taker repeated the property question and was answered that the rent was a fortunate possessor of a few thousands; "and" said he, "if you include clothes in de valuation, you might add a good deal more to it."

Census-taker—Clothing is not included. Can you and your wife read and write?

Colored Individual—Astonished, Sah! Does de law say dat I shall give dis information?

The Census-taker hastily explained the law and authority for asking the question.

Colored Individual—Well, dis is not for the Directory?

Census-taker—It is for the census.

Colored Individual—Ah! I see. Well, I can't read much, and can't write, nor my wife either; but my boy is going to school and he does de writing for de family.

Census-taker—Can you read so you could not vote?" brought an answer, with lightning-like rapidity; "No, Sah; I voted at de last election, and I am agoing to vote agin, if nobody stops me."

After the conclusion of the enumeration—"You say dis is not for the Directory?"

Census-taker—No, Sir. It is for the census.

Colored Individual—Ah! I see.

The census-taker seeing that the "census" was still a mystery to his colored friend, explained its objects to him, and was majestically bowed out by the host, who sank elegantly into the open arms of an easy-chair.

In a little frame shanty in the rear, which, by a slight stretch of the imagination might have been transformed into a Southern slave's cabin, two old darkeys from "Old Virginia's shore," were interviewed by the census-taker. "Lord bless us, honey, do you want my name and de old woman's too? Why, what goods is our names? Go long, you are only joking with old aunty." Assuring her that he was not, and that it was as important that he should set their names as those of any other inhabitants, he replied, "Well, dat does beat all; are you gwine to write 'em all down in dat book? Uncle Jake! Uncle Jake! come here and talk to dis gentleman. Sit down, Sah, you must be tired, taking all de names of people."

Census-taker—How old are you and your husband?

Aunty—Good Lord, I can't tell, and I know Uncle Jake can't. It's been so long time since I 'member how dat I didn't recollect when it was; I spoke I must be a hundred, and I know Uncle Jake's older dan I am.

Being obliged to make a guess at their ages, the figures given made them older than they appeared. The question of occupation was not asked.

Aunty—I takes in washing and ironing, but Uncle Jake does so many things it's hard to say what you could call him; Uncle Jake, what is your business anyway?

Uncle Jake—Sometimes I sells baff for fistin'; sometimes I blacks boots; when I can get it to do I mends clocks for de neighbors; I've drove a cart; but de most I 'spect to do is whitewashing, and when you leave my work to de last you'll always find old Jake here, and if I'm out to work, why, sure, "Lize will tend to you."

Census-taker—Can either of you read or write?

Aunty—No, honey; I wish I could. De old man can spell out a little, but it sink much pleasure to hear him. I don't have much time to read, if I could, 'cept Sunday; and den I would like to know how to read de "blessed book." But, den, dere is some of de chilien around here dat wants it for me. I've got 16 inside of de house. It's full of pictures; and I've got so how dat I know what most all de pictures means. (Here the old woman's tongue was lost in the room a huge family Bible, that seemed to be the most expensive article in the house. Turning over the pages a few moments, to please her, the census-taker started to go; but being asked by the old woman to tell her the meaning of the comic, he stopped to explain it, and remarked, at the end of the explanation, that it was taken in some shape all over the civilized world.)

Aunty—Land sakes child! Dat you mean to tell me dat you go all over the world takin' down everything like you did here, and dat it takes you ten years to do it before you can get back from de place where you started? and the old woman raised her arms, dropped the long pads, and her brass-rimmed spectacles fell into the tub.

Assuring her that he had the enumeration of only a small portion of the world's inhabitants to perform, the census-taker left the old woman only partially divested of the idea that it was his business to take the census of the whole world.

CRIMES OF A DAY.

Deadly Assaults and Outrageous Robberies—Disorder at Picnics—Capture of a Noted Desperado.

The Twentieth Ward is fast achieving an infamous notoriety as the scene of deadly affrays, and has lately had a sufficient number of these affairs to claim the bad pre-eminence once held by the "Rocky Sixth." The latest additions to the outrages in the ward occurred at an early hour yesterday morning. The principal of the affairs happened at about 2½ o'clock A. M., in the yard of No. 118 West Thirty-first-street. TERENCE MCKEON and JOHN MCDOWELL, both boarders in the house, got into a quarrel and went into the yard to fight it out. They had scarcely entered the yard when MCDOWELL drew a large jack-knife and assailing a savage attack upon MCKEON, stabbed him three times in the left breast. The wounds in all three instances were quite serious and the last of a dangerous character. The alarm of murder being given, Officer CANNON, of the Twentieth Precinct, rushed in and captured the assailant a moment after the affray, and took him to the West Thirty-fifth-street Police Station, where he was locked up, and yesterday morning arraigned before Justice COX at the Jefferson Market Police Court, and committed to await the result of the injuries. Both the parties are natives of Ireland, and young men, MCDOWELL being twenty-seven years of age, and MCKEON, who was taken to Bellevue Hospital, twenty-two years old.

Another affray occurred in the Twentieth Ward, at 1½ o'clock A. M., in the liquor-store of MCINTYRE & REYNOLDS, south-west corner of Forty-first-street and Ninth-avenue, when JOHN LEYTON, of No. 407 West Forty-second-street, was assailed by WILLIAM AIKEN, who was armed with an iron-bound wooden bar, with which he gave LEYTON two severe wounds upon the head and in the left side of LEYTON. The assailant escaped after committing the crime, and the Police were not informed of the affair until the wounded man appeared at the Station-house in West Thirty-fifth-street in search of surgical aid, which was extended him, after which he left for his home.

The Nineteenth Ward is also becoming notorious for crimes and violence, and yesterday morning three outrages were committed within its limits. The most serious of these was the case of JOHN BRENNAN, who was state-keeper at Hamilton Park, at Third-avenue and Sixty-seventh-street, where he was found cold on Saturday, and in the discharge of his duties refused admission to a party of roughs. They did not attempt any violence at the moment, but after the picnic was dismissed, when BRENNAN started to go home, he had got but a few paces away from the grounds when he was knocked down by a stone hurled at him from the street, and being examined it was found that his skull had been fractured, and the wound, therefore, of a very dangerous if not fatal character. The persons who threw the stone were not seen, and as they fled immediately pursuit was not resorted to, nor can a description of their persons be obtained. The injured man was taken home by his mother.

JAMES KELLY, of No. 403 East Fourteenth-street, while driving an express wagon, was attacked about 1 o'clock yesterday morning in Forty-fifth-street, near Madison-avenue, by two men, who threw him from his wagon, and knocked one of his wagon by a blow from a stone, and robbed of $8, which was all the money he had upon his person, as he lay prostrate in the street. The assailants then escaped, and the victim of the outrage went to the Nineteenth Precinct Station-house, where his wound was dressed, and he went to his home.

The Aurora Club of the First Ward held a picnic on Saturday at Funk's Union Park, Sixty-third-street and East River, and protracted the affair, as usual, into the night, when, as is generally the case, the party became disorderly. About 10 o'clock they became so violent that the proprietor was forced to call upon the Police for protection, and Capt. GUNNING, of the Nineteenth Precinct, repaired to the scene and restored quiet by dispersing the picnic.

JAMES CRAGIN, living at Sixty-second-street and Third-avenue, was assaulted yesterday morning, near his home, by MORRIS HARLON, who lived in that neighborhood. CRAGIN was struck on the head with a stone, inflicting a severe scalp wound. HARLON was arrested, and being arraigned before Justice COULTER, at the Yorkville Police Court, was committed for trial in default of $800 bail.

Yesterday morning an unknown woman attempted to commit suicide by jumping into East River from the ferry-boat Queens County, when it was midway in the stream between Hunter's Point and the Thirty-fourth-street Ferry slip. She was rescued by persons in a small boat, who were near by, and taken by them to Bellevue Hospital.

JAMES WARDEN was arraigned yesterday before Justice DOWLING, on a charge of stealing a pocket-book containing $43 from the house of EDWARD C. TAYLOR, No. 451 Hudson-street, and having confessed his guilt was committed for trial.

On the 15th of March last, three men entered the loan office of Mr. JOSEPH JACKSON, No. 5 Amity street, and finding him alone struck him on the head with a blunt instrument rendering him insensible, after which they robbed him of a watch and a diamond pin, pocket book, and other articles. Detectives KING and LYONS soon after arrested DANIEL alias "Reddy" BRYNES and FRANK DOLAN who were proved to have been concerned in the affair, and having been convicted in the General Sessions were sentenced to a term of nineteen years and six months each in Sing Sing. At that time it was ascertained that PATRICK EGAN a notorious criminal was also concerned in the crime, and Detectives KING and LYONS have ever since been looking for him. Being engaged upon the Nathan case, during which they, in common with all the detectives, have hunted up all known thieves, they finally discovered EGAN on Saturday at work on a building-wood factory at the foot of East Sixty-fourth-street, and arrested him for the Jackson affair. He freely confessed his guilt, even to the extent of admitting that it was he who rendered JACKSON insensible by striking him on the head with an iron weight. The desperado was locked up at Police Head-quarters by order of Superintendent JOURNEAY, and will be arraigned this morning at the Tombs Police Court. Upon his person was found a memorandum showing that he had committed a burglary at the residence of SIGMUND ULMAN, No. 339 East Fifty-eighth-street, by means of which property worth $400 was recovered at the second-hand store of LAWRENCE, No. 220 Seventh-avenue, and the person arrested as a receiver of stolen goods, as already announced.

Politics in the First Congressional District.

The race for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the First District is being narrowed down. Hon. HENRY A. REEVES, on the part of Suffolk County, the present incumbent, and Hon. ERASTUS BROOKS, from Richmond, will undoubtedly be found. Queens County has a candidate—Hon. J. B. PEARSALL, the present member of the Legislature from the First Assembly District. It will be remembered that on account of the action of Mr. PEARSALL in the previous Legislature, the Republicans of the First District made no nomination for Assembly at the last election. The other name, backed by a large number of influential supporters both in and out of the district, is Hon. E. A. LAWRENCE, present Chairman of the Queens County Board of Supervisors, and formerly member of Assembly from Queens County. Both Messrs. LAWRENCE and PEARSALL are men of ability and integrity, well known throughout the district—men who have friends of personal admirers, and who would well represent the district at Washington.

Among the gentlemen talked of in connection with the Republican nomination for Congress in the First District are Col. A. WAGSTAFF, of Suffolk County, formerly member of Assembly; L. PEARSON, of Richmond district—present member of the State Committee; C. C. NORRELL, of Richmond, Financial Editor of the NEW-YORK TIMES; Col. F. A. LAWRENCE, of Queens, formerly a Democrat, but who has since supported Gen. GRANT; ALBERT C. DEAN, of Richmond; and Judge HEDGES, of Suffolk County.

The shipments of Specie for the week amount to $6,364,000, of which $3,426,625 was in American Gold Coin, and the remainder in Miscellaneous Gold and Silver. The Treasury received, during the week, $3,038,000 for Customs, and paid out $624,408 for Gold Interest on the Public Debt. The Gold averages of the Banks are down $6,194,700, and they also lose $2,580,763 in Greenbacks, which have gone, for the most part, to swell the currency balances in the Treasury Office, which stands $14,381,115 against $12,446,314 at the close of last week. The Loans and Discounts at Bank are $767,600 less than last Monday, and the general line of Deposits is down $6,738,401.

The sales of Gold were in the main rather lower than on Friday. At one time the price was down to 120¾ @ ¾ int., but the market subsequently rallied to 121¼@121⅜ @ cent.

The Public Funds were firmer, and the advance on 5-20s of 1862 was especially marked; said to be on orders from Frankfort for this class of Bonds. The other descriptions sympathized to the extent of ¼@¾ @ cent., as compared with the last figures of Friday.

The Railway market was also firmer, and the fresh orders of the day to buy Stocks, though not extensive in demand, had the effect to advance prices on New-York Central Stock and Scrip, Lake Shore, North-west, St. Paul, and Ohio and Mississippi. The market left off steady in the afternoon, the notable feature being the small offerings of Stock on advancing prices. After the late Board the following quotations were made as compared with Friday night. Money left off easy at 4 @ cent.; Exchange, 110¾@110¾ for sight, London, and 109¾ for 60 days:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

Our special correspondent in Paris states that Italy is to send 50,000 men to the aid of France this week, and that Austria will also send a contingent at once. He also states that Gen. MCMAHON's Chief of Staff, Gen. COLSON, was killed at the side of the former in the battle of Haguenau, of the 6th inst., and that Gen. RAOULT is missing. Metz is preparing for a vigorous defense. The Prince Imperial was to return to Paris last night.

Official dispatches, received in Berlin from Mayence, give particulars of a general forward movement of the Prussians along their entire line, inaugurated on the 5th instant. The heads of their columns moved upon the Saar, and on the 6th Gen. KAMEKE found the French in a strong position west of Saarbrücken, in the mountains. They engaged them at once, and were reinforced by other divisions directed to the field by the sound of the artillery. After a severe fight Gen. FROSSARD, who commanded the French, was driven from his position, which was taken by assault. Many prisoners were taken. Other accounts say that night put an end to the fight, the French covering their retreat by a heavy fire of artillery. Another Berlin dispatch says that the French Emperor had withdrawn his entire line and was concentrating for the defense of Paris. The French say that FROSSARD's Corps had to encounter the whole Prussian Army, and that he held his ground from 2 o'clock until 6 o'clock, when he retreated in good order. The situation is not compromised, the dispatches say, but the enemy is on French soil, and a great effort is needed.

Dispatches from Paris contain a proclamation from the Government, laying before the French people telegrams from the Emperor NAPOLEON at Metz, in which they admit the retirement of Gen. FROSSARD from the Saar, and that Marshal MCMAHON had lost a battle. In one of these, dated at 3½ A. M., yesterday, the Emperor says his communications with MCMAHON have been interrupted, and that he (the Emperor) is going to place himself in the centre of the position. The Paris Presse says that on Saturday seven persons were arrested at the Bourse, and at 3 o'clock shouts of "A bas la Bourse" were heard from persons who had become exasperated with the dissemination of false news by the speculators. On this an order to close the Bourse was issued, and the infuriated crowd tore up the railings of the enclosure. The building was evacuated before a force brought for that purpose, amid the shouts from the throng on the Place outside. A judicial investigation was in progress at the date of the dispatch. La Liberté says that at 1 P. M. the Bourse was "invaded by a crowd maddened with joy and enthusiasm," in consequence of the announcement that a victory had been gained by Marshal MCMAHON. Inquiry at the Police Bureau resulted in the information that no official news had been received. Soon afterward a placard, by authority of the Administration, announced that MCMAHON had occupied a strong position, but made no allusion to a fight.

The dispatches from Berlin contain further details of the victory over the French at Haguenau, under Gen. MCMAHON. The captures include 4,000 prisoners, two French eagles and six mitrailleurs. The head-quarters of the Prince CHARLES FREDERICK is at Bluskastel, and the Crown Prince is at Sultz, while the general head-quarters of the Prussians has been advanced to Kaiserlautern. The Imperial dispatches in Paris saying that MCMAHON had been separated from the main army, caused great consternation, and La Liberté calls upon the people of France to rise en masse to repel the invaders.

A London dispatch says the attitude of the British Government in relation to Belgium, is regarded with approbation in Berlin.

GENERAL.

The Private Secretary to the Counselor of the French Legation at Washington, committed suicide on Saturday afternoon, by shooting himself below the heart. He lived about four hours after the act, and left letters giving the motive as a desire to obtain rest and peace, which he hoped to find in the grave, from bodily and mental illness. He was a member of a noble French family, and had passed several years in this country under an assumed name.

The President has appointed LEE S. HYDE Postmaster at Dunkirk, N. Y., in place of PATTERSON, who has been removed.

An Elmira, N. Y., dispatch announces the death of JARVIS LANGDON, a prominent citizen of that place.

A letter from Greenville, Tenn., says that A. H. PETTIBONE will be the next Republican candidate for Congress from that district, and that ANDREW JOHNSON will be the candidate of the Democrats, but that he will have a powerful rival in "JIM" WHITE, who is said to have the "inside track."

The new Constitution of Illinois goes into operation today. It makes many changes in the local judiciary. Justices of the Peace are hereafter to be chosen in Chicago by the Circuit Judges.

There remain to be finished a gap of but thirty-four miles of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, which, it is said, will be completed this week.

Garroting, fighting and burglary are becoming so common in Denver, Colorado, that a vigilance committee to punish the desperadoes who infest the place is talked of.

A dispatch from Alleghany, Va., says that by the accident on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, on Saturday night, in addition to those already reported injured, Mr. POLLARD, contractor on the railroad, and his family, Mr. HOGE, of Staunton, Va., and Mr. GREEN, supposed to be from Hanover, were badly injured. All that can be done for the sufferers, it is said, is being done.

The tug-boat Tornado exploded her boiler on Lake Ontario, Saturday, four miles from Oswego, and one and a half miles from shore. The Captain, engineer and a deck-hand were lost. The boat was valued at $10,000.

JAMES DENTON, a boy thirteen years of age, while out gunning, on Friday, near Charlestown, Mass., was accidentally shot by a companion, and instantly killed. The gun was loaded with buck-shot, and the charge carried off the entire back of the boy's head.

In a game of base-ball at Cleveland, Ohio on Saturday, the Forest City Club were defeated by the Athletics of Philadelphia, the score standing 25 to 7.

The ship Levanter, Capt. BURROWS, owned by M. GLEASON, of Boston, was burned at sea, together with her cargo, on the 26th ult., near fort to extinguish the fire, took to the boats, and were subsequently picked up by a fishing schooner. They landed at Marblehead on Friday. The ship was 1,322 tons burden.

A Memphis, Tenn., dispatch says the returns in the First Congressional District show increased Democratic gains, and the success of the candidate of that party.

The reported discovery of the cotton worm in the cotton fields of the South-west, has proved to be erroneous, the insect being the grass worm. The damage done is slight, and favorable weather, it is believed, will remedy the evil and give a satisfactory crop.

On Saturday night, in Boston, in the "South Cove district," a policeman arrested a boy named RICHARD BURKE, when a crowd collected and attempted to rescue the prisoner. The officer discharged four shots into the crowd, wounding four boys seriously. An infuriated crowd attacked the officer with brick-bats and paving-stones, but they were dispersed by a force of policemen.

A writ of habeas corpus has been issued by Judge GEORGE W. BROOKS, of the United States Circuit Court, for all citizens held by Col. KIRK, under the orders of Gov. HOLDEN, to appear at Salisbury today. Mr. TURNER, editor of the Raleigh Sentinel, has been arrested by Col. KIRKE, in Orange County, by militia from Alamance County.

A Raleigh dispatch says that, from present appearances, the State of North Carolina has gone Democratic by a large majority, with a two-thirds majority in both branches of the Legislature. Five of the seven Congressmen elect are said to be Democrats.

The annual encampment of the Twenty-eighth Brigade of the State Militia, will be held at Binghamton on the 25th inst., and will continue one week.

KROEYER's four-story brick building, located on Central-avenue, in Cincinnati, Ohio, was burned on Saturday morning. It was occupied as a manufactory. Loss, $30,000; insurance, $4,000.

The Granite Railroad in Quincy, Mass., said to be the oldest road in the country, and always heretofore operated by horse-power, has been purchased by the Old Colony and Newport Railway Company, and will henceforth be operated with the main line.

The Prussian Victory.

The whole face of the campaign is changed. The French have sustained a defeat so overwhelming that we very much question whether it will be possible for the Emperor and his Generals to retrieve it. NAPOLEON, instead of occupying an offensive position, has now all his work to do to defend Paris. He acknowledges in a dispatch to his Ministers that his communications with Marshal MCMAHON have been interrupted—a fact which in itself reveals the magnitude of the disaster which has overtaken the French forces. The dispatch from our special correspondent throws additional light on the great event now made known to us. When we read the general dispatches, the first question that arises in the mind is, what has become of the French forces which were pushed into Saarbrücken from St. Avold and Forbach? A clean sweep seems to have been made of them all. "I am going to place myself in the centre of the position," NAPOLEON telegraphs to Paris. The truth is he can scarcely be said to have a centre to boast of. The entire army is driven back to Metz. The position at Saarbrücken is lost—on that line, indeed, everything is lost. The Prussians caught MCMAHON in one place, and FROSSARD in another, and utterly crushed them both. The loss must be tremendous. Four thousand prisoners were taken by the Prussians, thirty guns, six mitrailleuse and two standards. France has never received such a blow since Waterloo. All Europe must be convulsed by such an event.

The Prussian head-quarters are now at Kaiser-lautern, a point from which a grand advance on Metz from one side, and on Strasbourg from the other, may easily be made. Marshal MCMAHON is at Saverne, between Haguenau and Saarburg. He will, perhaps, attempt to defend Strasbourg, which is at present in great jeopardy, or he may endeavor to get back to the main army. The French front may now be traced in a line from Metz to Nancy. This brief description will enable the reader to trace the various forces on the map—but it conveys no idea of the magnitude of the victory won by the Prussian forces.

It is evident that two actions were fought on the 6th. A division of the Prussian Army, under Gen. VON GOEBEN advanced upon Saarbrücken, and encountered the French under Gen. FROSSARD. The engagement appears to have lasted four hours, and to have ended in a complete rout of the French. Gen. FROSSARD himself is said, in one dispatch, to be in Paris—in which case he must have run hard. The second battle took place on the same day at or near Haguenau, the Prussians being under the Crown Prince. The French were commanded by Gen. MCMAHON. There, also, a disastrous defeat befell the Imperial forces. MCMAHON's Corps was all but annihilated, and no dispatches have been received from him. The loss of men must have been terrific, for both sides evidently fought gallantly. The plan of the Prussian attack appears to have been absolutely irresistible.

How it was that this concerted movement of the Prussian Army could have caught the French at such a disadvantage has yet to be explained. The whole campaign has evidently been a gigantic blunder on NAPOLEON's part. If he can save his capital it will be as much as lies within his power. Paris is in a tumult of apprehension and excitement. The Ministers frankly tell the people that they are in danger. They talk no more of advancing to Berlin. Their cry now is: "Help us to save the country." Paris is declared to be in a state of siege, and hurried attempts are being made to secure it against the approach of the enemy. "A serious effort is necessary," proclaim the agitated Ministers. The reverse must have fallen like a thunder-bolt on the French people, and it is probably only the beginning of vast misfortunes in store for them. At any rate, the Prussians have a position which menaces the safety of the Empire, and the troops, flushed with victory, would obey with eagerness the order to march on Paris.

The moment has come for the friends of France in Europe, if she has ANY, to declare themselves. Without allies it is as clear as the sun at noonday that France must be finally, hopelessly defeated. NAPOLEON wished to beat Prussia "single-handed." He cannot do it. Unless the troops of other Powers come to his assistance, he cannot save France. Accordingly, the intelligence transmitted to us from our own correspondent at Paris is of the highest moment. It states that Italy has dispatched an army to the relief of NAPOLEON, and that Austria will at once follow the example. It is quite possible that NAPOLEON had an understanding before the campaign with Italy and Austria, but wished to do without their assistance if possible. We stated on the authority of our correspondent at Paris, some time ago, that Austria had made a treaty with France. Now is the time for her interference. France is in a dire extremity, and nothing but help from outside can bring her through it. The series of battles fought on Friday and Saturday will henceforth rank among the most memorable in the annals of history.

The Republican Party in the Fall Campaign.

"The work of the Republican Party is not finished," said Mr. CONKLING at Saratoga, "nor is there any other party able or willing to finish it." Truer words were never spoken. There is a large unfinished work before us, and the antecedents and aspirations of the Republican Party indicate its special fitness for the task. It has done so much, and done it so well, that it should not shrink from the responsibilities now before it. "We were never more earnest Republicans than now," the Senator remarked on the same occasion. That is good news too. But if the earnestness which animates the leaders assembled at Saratoga is to be imparted to the rank and file, and to be sustained until November—as it must be if victory is to be then achieved, —we apprehend that there must be some intelligible and specific exposition of the work which lies before the party. Generalization is well enough in its way, but a strong and clearly defined purpose is essential to enthusiasm. The absence of any sign of such a purpose is the weak point in Mr. CONKLING's speech.

The same defect is apparent in the otherwise admirable sketch of recent Republican achievements which Vice-President COLFAX has contributed to the Independent. As a vindication of the present Congress, the statement of Mr. COLFAX is almost complete. We cannot accept his estimate of the Tariff changes which were appended to the Tax bill, and are too conscious of the blunders committed by the ultra-protectionists in other respects, to concur in an unqualified eulogy of the fiscal and financial sagacity of the ruling majority. In the main, however, the claim to popular confidence which Mr. COLFAX sets up in behalf of the party is eminently just. It has completed reconstruction, has perfected essential constitutional guarantees, has insisted upon retrenchment, has largely reduced taxation, and has provided for the more equitable distribution of banking facilities. It shares with the Administration the credit inseparable from the more efficient collection of revenue, and from a reduction of the expenses in every branch of the Government. The gain accruing to the party from these sources Mr. COLFAX has not overstated. Very wisely, moreover, he couples a reference to the great reduction of the debt with the expression of a hope that Mr. BOUTWELL will push his costly policy "not so rapidly" in the future. That hope the country echoes, not without substantial cause.

Nor can it be said that Mr. COLFAX underrates the strength of the Democracy. If he has erred at all upon this point, it is in dwarfing the fierce intestine conflict now being waged by opposing sections of the Democratic Party. He is fully warranted, however, in the opinion that "the Democratic leaders enter upon the contest just opening" "with more confidently expressed hopes of victory than for many years past." Their confidence is not without a certain degree of justification. The fact that it exists, and that it will impart vigor to their efforts in the canvass, suggests a moral which only Republican optimists will overlook. For if, as Mr. COLFAX declares, "thorough unity," "an energy worthy of their principles," "and a zeal akin to that which has given them so many brilliant victories," are the conditions to be complied with by Republicans if they would make success sure, it is plain that something must be found to inspire energy and zeal in the party and its managers. So far, it must be confessed, those to whom the party looks for inspiration have very imperfectly performed the functions of leadership. Our Brooklyn contemporary, the Union, proclaims no more than the truth when it declares that if the Republican Party is to win its Autumn battle, "it must be more aroused to the perils of the situation than it appears to be today; its rank and file must take a greater interest in its hoped-for success than they show today; its appeal to the people must be more spirit-stirring than it is today." These are not the most pleasant words that might be spoken, but their obvious truthfulness renders it necessary that they should be heard. Glorification and compliments will not insure victory.

It is idle to suppose that a non-committal attitude will be of much avail in a close, hard-fought contest. Facts go further than fine words; well-defined propositions will be of more avail than grandiloquent references to the war and reconstruction. One ugly fact confronts us at the outset. The "thorough unity" which Mr. COLFAX admits to be indispensable, does not exist. Republicans in Congress are at variance with the Administration upon a subject which at this moment vitally affects the national interests. The President suggested a measure that would have partially restored the American carrying trade, with profits incident to the European war, but his suggestion was overruled by the Republican members, who, in other matters, have done the work of monopolists. For the odium and the loss inseparable from this action, the whole party are held responsible. Here, then, is a subject in regard to which continued silence is impossible. The party throughout the country must pass judgment one way or the other; it must sustain the President against the monopolists, or the monopolists against the President. A similar issue—substituting the people for the President—is presented in connection with tariff reform; and they are blind leaders of the blind who imagine that it can be averted. The growing tendency to sectionalism, notably exemplified in the non-action on the Reapportionment bill, is another matter that should receive attention. The greed of Eastern Representatives has inflicted injustice on the West; and the selfishness which thus introduces discontent where Republican principles are the strongest, cannot be too summarily rebuked.

We adduce these examples to show how much there is about which Republican orators may usefully talk, and how various are the questions which enter into the Fall campaign. It may not be desirable, or possible, to embody in a platform every subject that engages public attention; but Republican leaders, who would establish their title to leadership, will not shrink from the free discussion of topics which directly touch the interests and feelings of the people. Mr. COLFAX may deem it discreet not to meddle with the "new issues," but here they are, challenging attention and awakening sympathies which prudent party managers will not attempt to repress. The Democratic Party has resisted new issues, and has been again and again defeated in consequence. The Republican Party owes its glory and greatness to its courage, integrity, and aptitude in grappling with great questions as they arose. As the party of progress, it will not be content to enter into battle under a leadership which ignores living questions, or which stands aloof from problems whose difficulty is as nothing compared with their importance.

The City Police Force.

The frequent occurrence of "mysteries" in our criminal annals points with sufficient distinctness to the fact that the dangerous classes of society can plan enterprises which must be confronted with at least an equal amount of preventive and detective ability. Our artists in crime attain to proficiency much quicker than the Police are able to counteract them. The intelligence and ability of the force tends, indeed, to sink to a level short even of mediocrity. There is no community in the world that can less easily afford to neglect the efficiency of the guardians of its social order than ours, and there is none where the tests of that efficiency are so loosely applied. We are well aw are of the steady and persistent efforts that are being made by Superintendent JOURDAN to raise the morale, and to reform the discipline, of the force under his command. But it is obvious enough that no chief, however energetic, can accomplish that thorough reconstruction which alone can give us a force able to cope with the organized foes of society, unless fully sustained by our City Government. Superintendent JOURDAN has done, within a short period, all that he could reasonably be expected to do. The reforms he has effected are a sufficient proof that he understands the task he has undertaken, and his continued efforts in the same direction show that he is conscious that a considerable amount of time, as well as of energy, must be expended before any uniform change for the better can be expected.

There are, however, various radical changes in the administration of the force which he might naturally hesitate to incur the responsibility of originating, but which are none the less demanded by the necessities of public order. One of these is the exercise of a more thorough examination into the character and antecedents of every man admitted into the force, and another is an unquestioned right to reject the services of certain classes of men, in whom violent political or national antipathies may be expected to interfere with a due discharge of duty. The tone and character of any body of men cannot be raised in a few months, but it is only by the application of a rigid system of preliminary tests that it can be permanently raised at all. The necessity for a general increase of the force is also universally admitted by all who have taken the pains to examine into the subject. We have already adverted to the utter inadequacy of the protection afforded by an officer passing a given point during the night at intervals of three hours. The attempt to sustain a fixed proportion between the members of our Police force, and the extent of our population, is an utterly delusive one. The immense strides of up-town expansion represent an increase of inhabited area ten times greater than it would appear if calculated upon the mere basis of population. For the thief, the burglar, and the assassin there is here a field of effort, where, under existing provisions, they can ply their trade with comparative immunity. As a mere question of financial policy, the City cannot afford to leave unprotected some of its most valuable tax-yielding property, and thereby lower its value and check its increase—while as a matter of pressing necessity there are many channels of public expenditure that might be made to yield precedence to this one.

The detective arm of our Police force is no less urgently in need of reform than the other department. However indisputable may be the talents of some of its officers, they are too well known to the criminal classes with whom they have to deal. To strike swiftly, surely, and secretly is the very essence of detective duty, and it is impossible to do either the one or the other while the face of an officer is as well known to the fraternity of thieves, swindlers and desperadoes as the face of the City Hall clock. A frequent exchange of social amenities with the men they are commissioned to watch, may be productive of mutual good feeling, but can scarcely forward the ends of justice. Many criminal acts of late occurrence have exhibited a perfection of diabolical finesse, and the man who has to trap game with so keenly-developed a power of perception, must have all the advantages on his side that secrecy and disarmed suspicion can give him. We want a small corps d'élite of detectives, not only unknown to the men they have to deal with, but unknown even to each other. The chief of a secret Police must have an absolute choice of his instruments, and an absolute power of collecting evidence from independent sources, of whose value he must be the sole judge. A vague dread of an unseen and ubiquitous hand of justice has its place as a power in preventing crime, and joined to the greater caution which would be inspired by a more effective and numerous force of recognized public guardians, would do much to save us from that reign of lawlessness on which we are in no little danger of entering.

Long Delays in Criminal Cases.

Before the case of JOHN REAL is entirely forgotten, it is desirable to call attention to the state of the law, which renders it possible for a man under sentence of capital punishment to carry on appeals for months, or even years, and then to be executed at last.

There can be no doubt that REAL at one time thoroughly believed he would escape the gallows. His crime would not have fixed itself so deeply on the public attention but for the number of murders which occurred during the past two years. Great political influence was brought to bear in favor of REAL, and it used to be said—probably without truth—that he was allowed to go about the City in charge of a Deputy Sheriff. At any rate, he must have been led to believe that he had a very fair chance of escaping the last dread penalty of the law.

For two years he was enabled to stave off his sentence. By that time the particulars of the murder were forgotten. It was easy to make out that the murdered man had pursued a course of conduct which naturally provoked the most violent animosity on the part of REAL, and today it would be difficult to persuade some thousands of people in this City that REAL was not a martyr.

It was not mercy to the convict to allow him to live two years in anticipation of having his sentence commuted. On the other hand, the effect of his punishment as a warning to others was absolutely lost by the long delay. There ought to be a limit to the term allowed for appeals in the cases of felons sentenced to death. There should be but one Court of Appeal for all such cases, and the appeal when made should be heard within a given period—say three months. This is at once more just to the prisoner, and more conducive to the ends of justice. The length of time which is now suffered to elapse between the commission of a crime and the trial of the accused is another great evil in our present system of administering justice. The man JACKSON, for instance, who shot DOUGLAS last Fall, has not yet been tried. He will have escaped a whole year, if not more, without even passing through the formality of a trial. Is this the way to make the law feared? Is it the way to strengthen the hands of the Police, as they must be strengthened if we are ever to obtain the upper hand of the criminal classes in this City?

The Election in North Carolina.

The returns indicate conclusively that the Democrats have carried North Carolina by a large majority. They have insured the election of a Democratic United States Senator in the place of Senator ABBOTT, whose term expires on the 4th of March next, and five of the seven members of Congress. In 1868 the State gave Grant over twelve thousand majority, and it is now estimated that the Democratic majority in the recent canvass will reach nearly ten thousand.

It is not difficult to account for so marked a change of political sentiment in North Carolina, when we consider the tactics which have been pursued by those who have been in control as the representatives of the Republican Party. The policy adopted by Gov. HOLDEN was, in our opinion, ill-advised, and precisely such as was calculated to exasperate the people, and alienate them from us. He undertook to conduct the campaign upon the extreme proscriptive plan which had been pursued in previous years, and the result has proved that he went the right way to work to render the Democrats victorious. The appeal in behalf of the negro, which was the pretext of Gov. HOLDEN's extreme measures, was not responded to, even by the freedmen themselves. The whites were consolidated in their opposition to what was regarded as an outrageous assumption of authority, and an unnecessary exercise of a despotic power.

The lesson of the campaign just closed in North Carolina is one which ought to be heeded by the Republican managers in every Southern State, and especially by the National Committee at Washington, now engaged in planning the tactics upon which the several State elections are to be prosecuted. The time has passed by for mere fanatical appeals in behalf of the negro. Hereafter, the issues in the local canvasses must be such as address themselves to the intelligence as well as to the interests of the whole people, without regard to color. Since the war, and pending reconstruction, the great majority of the white population has refrained from participating in elections, and the consequence has been that there was little or no opposition to Republican management. The situation is now changed, and it may be safely anticipated that hereafter the whole population will take an active part in elections. Recognizing this fact, it is idle for the Republican Party to adopt either a sectional or a class policy. So long as it continues to do so, it may expect to be defeated in every Southern State, as it has been in North Carolina.

The Apotheosis of Murderers.

Before and since the day when a dispute about the color of a rose plunged a great Kingdom into war, flowers have played an important part in all the emergencies of life. The ancients sat garlanded at their feasts, and strewed blossoms before their brides. And with us moderns the use of flowers has grown almost into a dissipation. We wreathe them alike about the cradle and the grave; they greet our entrance into life and attend our departure from it. Every important event between these two epochs is symbolized by their presence. No fashionable dinner-table is complete without them; they adorn alike the altar and the stage, and the bridal bouquet and the orange blossoms are as indispensable concomitants of a wedding as veil and ring. So universal is our use of flowers that it seemed impossible to find any social contingency where they had not already been brought into play.

In the West, however, we have a people whose originality scorns the narrow bounds which, in older and more staid communities, limit the proprieties of life. To the town of Norwalk, Ohio, belongs the honor of discovering an use for flowers which, considering the present mania for homicide, must fill the hearts of horticulturists with joy. The good people of Norwalk have lately been edified by the execution of a murderer named BENNET SCOP. From all accounts he must have been a most engaging assassin—the gentlest ruffian that ever cut a throat. Ladies who visited the prison at once succumbed to his fascinations, and testified their compassionate regard by donations of flowers, sweetmeats, and other delicate offerings. The sympathy thus aroused culminated on the morning of his execution in the presentation to the culprit of several bouquets which, we are told, he took great pleasure in arranging on the scaffold. And so this amiable homicide went gaily to his death, like the victim of a classic sacrifice, embowered in roses.

If this Ohio innovation should ever obtain in this City, and with it the other Ohio practice of hanging murderers, the fortunes of our florists will be made at once. For here we do nothing by halves, and when once we recognize the propriety of the thing at all, every condemned cell will be converted into a conservatory, and the scaffold will recall what we read of the hanging gardens of Babylon. It is a practice, however, we should not feel disposed to encourage. The mawkish sentimentality which fosters crime by sympathizing with the criminal, is sufficiently rife among us already, and murder has privileges and immunities enough without being crowned and garlanded till it looks like virtue. In these days murderers are carried to the graveyard in a sort of triumphal procession, and well-known politicians follow as a mark of respect. The lesson taught by the execution of REAL was more than neutralized by the spectacle presented at his funeral yesterday.

A ruse, familiar to Wall-street, is evidently a somewhat dangerous one to attempt at present in Paris. A nation that has staked glory, reputation, existence almost, on one great struggle, may very naturally object to having its hopes and fears made the sport of a gambling ring of speculators. Hence the fury with which the volatile and impressionable Parisian populace yesterday attacked the Bourse, and the satisfaction they displayed over its evacuation. When a crowd, "maddened with joy and enthusiasm" at a fancied victory, can be capable of such excesses as the telegrams report, it is difficult to apprehend too strongly the results when the full consciousness of a total defeat has dawned upon them, and the prospect so dreaded by every Frenchman, of a foreign army at the gates of Paris, becomes a probability.

Earnest Republicans in Georgia, who are opposed to Gov. BULLOCK, assert that, in case a new election is held this Fall, the Governor will commit the same mistake that Gov. HOLDEN did in North Carolina, by magnifying slight disturbances, and seeking to make out a case for new Congressional interference. We trust that these apprehensions are unfounded, and that Gov. BULLOCK will profit by the election in North Carolina, and bring the State of Georgia permanently out of the unhappy political condition in which it has been for the last two years.

Conservatives in Virginia congratulate themselves on the happy escape the party has made from the complications which have occurred in other Southern States. The address of their State Central Committee, given elsewhere, strongly urges a continuance of the organization and policy which prevailed last year, and under which Gov. WALKER was elected. It contains other suggestions, clearly demonstrating, what was a matter of doubt last year, that the so-called "Conservative" organization in Virginia is essentially Democratic. There is practicably no difference between the Conservatives of Virginia and the Democratic Party.

There is a prospect of lively times in several of the districts of this State with reference to the approaching Congressional nominations, mostly on personal grounds. EDWARD M. MADDEN and Gen. VAN WYCK will contest the nomination in the Eleventh District; a very warm contest is imminent in the Twenty-third (Syracuse) District; several contestants have appeared for Mr. CHURCHILL's seat in the Oswego District; and State Senator L. L. LEWIS is "prospecting" for the nomination in Erie. It is to be hoped that these local strifes will not engender such a degree of bitterness as will mar the strength of the party at the general ticket.

Last week the emigration to this port was unusually small, evidently a result of the war in Europe. Not more than one-half the usual number of emigrants were landed at Castle Garden, the decrease being chiefly among the Germans, who are the most desirable of any nationality which is represented. So long as the present war lasts we may expect this state of things to continue, for the Germans are enthusiastic in favor of the war, and less inclined than usual to evade military duty.

The accounts of stabbing cases published in another part of this paper show how great is the necessity for an enforcement of the law in relation to concealed weapons. For every single instance we have of men drawing knives in the heat of passion, there must be at least scores of people in a similar station who carry about a stiletto blade, ostensibly for purposes of defense. As we have again and again insisted, there is no statute on our records of whose enforcement we have more urgent need than that against the carrying of concealed weapons. Its provisions have been glossed over and evaded till it has practically become a dead letter, and an abuse which is the cause of half the acts of ruffianism that occur among us is seldown as being justified by the very state of things it has aided so powerfully to bring about.

There is an increasing disposition upon the part of our Northern constituencies to return their ablest representatives to Congress. The prospect is that the next Congress will have a very large number of old members. Before the rebellion it was a peculiarity of the South that it retained its most acceptable representatives, while the North was continually sending new men. The result was that the South exercised a greater influence upon the national legislation than the North. We trust that hereafter a different course will be pursued by the Northern people, and that good men will not be dismissed until better ones are found.

The Augusta Constitutionalist is informed by a gentleman who has recently returned to Georgia from a Northern tour, that Gen. FRANK BLAIR bitterly regrets having fought against the South during the war, and would give his right arm if he could only recall the past. Gen. BLAIR belongs to that wing of the Democracy which believes in keeping up the struggle between the North and South on reconstruction and the negro—believing them to be "live issues"—and dissents from the policy of acceptance recently put forward by the New-York World and Chicago Times. These stories may or may not be true—probably they are a little of both.

According to the basis of representation agreed upon by the State Central Committee, the approaching Republican State Convention will consist of 412 members, which seems to us to be a larger body than was advisable. Yet there are those who favor a numerous representation in our conventions, as tending to insure greater freedom from undue influences. We fail to discover wherein a body as large as our Assembly is any more liable to be packed than one twice as large.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

The General Conference Postponed on Account of the War.

At the last meeting of the Executive Committee of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States, held in this City, the following action was taken by unanimous vote of those present, and with the concurrence of a large number of members who, being absent from the City, sent their opinions in writing:—

The Executive Committee have received, with profound regret, intelligence that the war now raging between France and Prussia renders it probable that the attendance of foreign delegates will be interrupted. Telegraphic dispatches from France and Germany were received immediately after the declaration of war, requesting the postponement of the Conference because of the inability of the delegates from those countries to attend. To those dispatches a reply was sent by cable that our arrangements had gone so far we could not postpone the Conference. Telegraphic dispatches were then received from Holland, Switzerland and England, giving the united judgment of the Alliances in all those countries that the Conference, for the reason mentioned, should be postponed. The British organization, in their dispatch, express their decided concurrence in this opinion of the Continental branches. Bishop MCILVAINE, of Ohio, and President ALDEN, of Union College, being in England, sent to us a joint dispatch, stating that the war and its complications render the attendance of European delegates impracticable, and will destroy the international character of the Conference, if it should be held under existing circumstances. Of vast an amount of time, labor and care, has been expended already upon the preparation for the Conference, so deep is the interest now felt in its approach by the Christian people of this country, and so cheerfully have the friends in the City of New-York responded to the call made upon their hospitalities, that nothing but imperative necessity could justify a second postponement of the Conference. But the Divine will is most clearly expressed in the mighty events now transpiring in Europe, in the unanimous wish of our brethren there, and in the concurrent opinion of friends of the Alliance as here, who have been consulted as far as practicable. Our sympathies are warmly enlisted in behalf of the Christian brethren whose lands are now involved in the miseries of war, and our prayers are and shall be offered that God may avert its calamities from them, and speedily restore unto them the blessings of peace. And we recognize fully, as we should feel in our own case, with war raging in the midst of them, and with the imminent possibilities of other European countries being involved therein, that men holding positions of influence and usefulness, men of wisdom and power, whose counsel is required in social and public affairs, should not at such a time quit their posts between them and their families, their official duties and their country. The General Conference requires the presence of these brethren, and without them it must lose its character and its object as an International Evangelical Council. To postpone the Conference, until a more convenient season is, therefore, inevitable. But the Infinite Wisdom which has ordered this result will, we have no doubt, also overrule the postponement to the furtherance of the Gospel, and to the accomplishment of still greater and better results than we could have reached by the Conference of the present year. Therefore be it

Resolved, 1. That the Executive Committee of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States with great reluctance yield to the expressed desire of the Alliances in Great Britain, France, Germany, Holland and Switzerland, that the General Conference, which was to be held in New-York, Sept. 28, 1870, be postponed on account of the war in Europe, which renders their attendance impracticable; and the Conference is hereby postponed, at least for the present year, and until such time as the providence of God shall open the way for its successful convocation.

2. That notice of this action be sent to all the European and American delegates who have been invited to attend, that it may be published in the papers.

3. That the thanks of the Executive Committee are hereby presented to those families and proprietors of hotels who proffered their hospitalities to the expected members of the Conference, and we cherish the hope that at no distant day they may yet welcome their guests with the return of peace. And that our thanks are also returned to those railroad and steamship companies, and all others, who by donations of money, or otherwise, have contributed to promote the success of the Conference.

4. That the Executive Committee has received with great satisfaction the generous invitation of the Christian people of Buffalo, for the foreign delegates to visit Buffalo and Niagara Falls as their guests, and in returning our hearty thanks for the same, we express the hope that at another time the hospitalities of the people may be enjoyed by the foreign members of the Alliance.

5. That an outbreak of war between Christian countries in the nineteenth century furnishes an occasion for deep humiliation before God, while we redouble our prayers and labors for the coming of that day when the Princes of Peace shall reign among the nations and they shall learn war no more.

6. That we thankfully rejoice in the happy influence which the preparations for the Alliance Conference have already exerted in bringing Christians from all denominations into closer fellowship and co-operation, and that we call upon the friends of the Alliance throughout the United States, especially in the South and West, to continue their efforts to organize branch Alliances, to hold Alliance meetings, and thus to promote the great cause of Christian union and the success of the General Conference, whenever it shall be convened.

The Author of "Vanity Fair."

From the World, Aug. 7.

The only high writer of fiction since the days of SCOTT is he whose bust, not his bones, is in the Abbey; who, seven years ago, died sleeping in his bed; whose children, two motherless girls, sorrowed meekly; whose family treasures were not greedily divided; whose walls were not covered with pictures from his own works, for he was too modest for that; who had been a visitor in America without either slandering or flattering us; who shed a tear for the desolated South—and left behind him, with those who knew him personally and those who did not, save through his works, that sweet and lovely memory which literally blossoms in the dust. There lie before us as we write the words of a poor, sick American girl which tell a tale of truth. "Often," says she, "when I have closed one of THACKERAY's books, I sit thinking with a full heart how much I owe him of what is best in me, of the purest pleasure I have ever known, filled with thankfulness for the power which has been given me to appreciate him in my poor way. This is the track which he left behind him here.

GENERAL TELEGRAMS.

THE VIRGINIA DISASTER.

Names of Some of the Injured—The Wounded Attended to.

ALLEGHANY, Va., Aug. 7.—By the accident on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, last night, Mr. POLLARD, a contractor on the road, and his family, and Mr. HOGE, of Staunton, were badly wounded. Mr. GREEN, reported to be from Hanover County, is wounded. Everything possible is being done to alleviate the suffering of the wounded. No ladies were hurt.

List of the Killed and Wounded—Nine Bodies Identified—Fifteen Persons Wounded—Cause of the Accident.

GAITHERIER, WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, Va., Aug. 7.—All the killed and wounded by the railroad accident at Jerry's Run, have been identified, excepting one laboring man, a foreigner. Below is a list of the killed and wounded:

Killed—Major James G. Porter, Lexington, Va.; Col. William Boulwer, King and Queen, Va.; McMillan, Pulaski County, Va.; John Morrisch, Uniontown, Va.; J. Boyd Hedley, Morristown, N. J.; N. McMaster, Richmond, Va.; P. B. Miner, Richmond, Va.; Geo. T. Cobb, Ex-State Senator of New-Jersey; Dr. H. H. Boyd, Danville, Va.

Wounded—Samuel R. Hance, Prince George County, Md., severely in the head; Frercis Early, Charlottesville, badly bruised; Robert Ford, Hungary Station, Henrico County, Va., badly in the head and left shoulder; Isham Ford, Hungary Station, dangerously in the head; John Green, of King George County, Va., seriously in stomach and back; Thomas J. Winston, Richmond, Va., slightly in back; William Clements, Henrico County, Va., severely in the head; Edward Harris, Hanover County, Va., slightly in back; Charles B. Hodge, Stanton, Va., badly; John I. Pollard, Montgomery, seriously, but not dangerously; Col. Jordan, railroad superintendent, Mobile, Ala., severely, but not dangerously; Mr. Kelley, Staunton, Va., hurt internally badly; George Dent, slightly; W. Van Wyck, Baltimore, Md., slightly; W. Cramp, Richmond, Va., seriously.

The accident was caused by the hind truck of the coach next to the last car running off the track, after passing over the trestle-work and curve in the road at Jerry Run, two miles from Alleghany Station, and eight miles from White Sulphur Springs. The train was running at the rate of only six miles an hour, and up a very steep grade. The conductor discovered the car off the track and pulled the alarm-bell, and the train was taken up in a very short space, but the car that was off the track went over the bank. It is supposed that the accident is the result of the sudden breaking of a wheel. The killed will be transported to Richmond in the morning, except PAXTON and son, who will be sent to Lexington. The railroad officials have done everything in their power for the wounded. A special train was dispatched from here with surgeons as soon as the accident was known. A portion of the wounded are at Jerry's Run.

POLYGAMY.

Reception of Rev. Dr. Newman at Salt Lake—His Correspondence with Brigham Young.

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 7.—Rev. Dr. NEWMAN and party have been received with marked attention by the Federal generals and other Gentile residents of this city, and they created a very favorable impression. Mr. NEWMAN has held a correspondence with BRIGHAM YOUNG, which closed late last evening. Mr. NEWMAN informed BRIGHAM YOUNG that he had arrived to debate the Bible doctrine against polygamy, in accordance with the challenge he had received from BRIGHAM YOUNG. YOUNG disclaimed ever giving, or knowing anything about any challenge. Mr. NEWMAN expressed disappointment given after receiving YOUNG's disclaimer. Mr. NEWMAN accepted an invitation to preach this evening in the Methodist Meeting-house. Meanwhile, Orson Pratt and other apostles called and incidentally remarked that NEWMAN could preach in the Tabernacle if ORSON PRATT could do the same in the Metropolitan Church at Washington. NEWMAN made no reply. Afterwards YOUNG wrote, inviting him to preach in the Tabernacle, but NEWMAN, having made other arrangements, declined. It is universally considered that BRIGHAM has backen out, for NEWMAN would be too much for him. The following is the correspondence:

MR. NEWMAN TO BRIGHAM YOUNG.

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 6, 1870.

To President Brigham Young:

SIR: In acceptance of your challenge given in your journal, the Salt Lake Telegraph, of the 3d of May last, to discuss the question, "Does the Bible sanction polygamy?" I have the pleasure to inform you that I am now ready to hold a public debate with you, as the head of the Mormon Church, upon the above question, under such regulations as may be agreed upon for the said discussion, and I suggest, for our mutual convenience, that either by yourself or by two gentlemen of your church, delegated by you, we meet two gentlemen whom I shall select for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for the debate with as little delay as possible. May I hope for a reply at your earliest convenience, and at least not later than 3 o'clock today? Respectfully, J. P. NEWMAN.

YOUNG TO NEWMAN.

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 6, 1870.

Rev. J. P. Newman.

SIR: Yours of even date has just been received in answer to which I have to inform you that no challenge was ever given by me to any person throughout the columns of the Salt Lake Daily Telegraph, and that this is the first intimation I have received that any such challenge ever appeared. You have been misinformed with regard to the Salt Lake Daily Telegraph. It is not my journal, but was owned and edited by Dr. FULLER, of Chicago, who was not a member of our Church, and I was not acquainted with its columns. Respectfully,

BRIGHAM YOUNG.

NEWMAN TO YOUNG.

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 15, 1870.

President Brigham Young:

SIR—I confess my disappointment at the contents of your note in reply to mine of this date. In the far East it is impossible to distinguish the local relations between yourself and those papers which advocate the interests of your Church, and when the copy of the Telegraph containing the article of the 3d of May last reached Washington the only construction upon it by my friends was that it was a challenge to come to your city to discuss the Bible doctrine of Polygamy. I have chosen to put a different construction upon that article. To take no further notice of it, you could then have adopted Telegraph as your organ, and the said article as a challenge which I either could not or dared not accept. That I am justified in this construction is clear from the following: The article in the Telegraph of May 3 contains these expressions. Alluding to my sermon, as reported in the New-York Herald, it says: "The discussion was a lenthened argument to prove that the Bible does not sustain polygamy. The sermon should have been delivered in the new Tabernacle to 10,000 people. The people to listen to it, and then Elder ORSON PRATT, or some prominent Mormon, should have had a hearing on the other side, and the people be allowed to decide. Dr. NEWMAN, by his very sermon, recognizes the religious element of the question. Let us have a fair contest of peaceful argument, and let the best man win. We will publish their notices in the Telegraph, and report their discourses as far as possible, use every influence in our power, if any is needed, to secure them the biggest halls and crowded congregations, and we are satisfied that every opportunity will be given them to conduct a campaign. We base this last remark on a statement made last week in the Tabernacle by President GEORGE A. SMITH, that the public halls throughout the Territory have been and would be open for clergymen of all denominations coming to Utah to preach. Come on, and convert them by the peaceful influences of the Bible, instead of using the means now proposed. Convince them by reason and Scriptural arguments, and no Cullom bill will be required."

I understand the article containing the above expressions was written by Elder SLOAN, of the Mormon Church, and as that time associate editor of the Telegraph, and that he was and has since been in constant intercourse with yourself. The expressions in the said article, which I have cited, were the foundation of the impression throughout the country that a challenge had thus been given through the columns of the Telegraph, and as such I myself had no alternative, but so to regard and accept it. I may add that I am informed that an impression prevailed here in Utah that a challenge had been given and accepted. Under this impression I have acted from that day to this, having myself both spoken of and seen allusions to the anticipated discussion in several prominent papers of the country. It was not until after my arrival in your city last evening, in pursuance of this impression, that I learned that the article in question, of May 3, was not the issue of the Salt Lake Herald of Aug 3, attempts, for the first time, to disabuse the public of the idea so generally prevalent. Still acting in good faith and knowing that you had never denied or recalled the challenge of the 3d of May, I informed you of my acceptance in your note of the object of my visit to your city. This morning, with your reply, will serve to put the matter before the public in its true light and dispel the impression of every man in all parts of the country that such a challenge had been given, and that such a discussion would be held. Following that, I have now finally discharged my share of the responsibility on the case. It only remains for me to subscribe myself respectfully, J. P. NEWMAN.

YOUNG TO NEWMAN.

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 6, 1870.

Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman:

SIR: It will be a pleasure to us if you will address our congregation to-morrow, in the small tabernacle, at 10 A. M., or, should you prefer it, in the new tabernacle, at 2 P. M., same subject, or both morning and evening.

Respectfully, BRIGHAM YOUNG.

P. S.—I hope to hear from you immediately. B. Y.

NEWMAN TO YOUNG.

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 6.—6 P. M.

President Brigham Young:

SIR.—In reply to your note, just received, to preach in the Tabernacle to-morrow, I have to say that, after disclaiming and declining, as you have done today, the discussions which I came here to hold, other arrangements to speak in the city were accepted by me which will preclude my compliance with your invitation.

Respectfully, J. P. NEWMAN.

The Methodists gave Mr. Newman a reception last evening.

TENNESSEE.

Pension Operations of Representative Butler—The Succession to His Seat Already Spoken of.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—A letter from Greenville, Tenn., just received here, to be submitted to the Commissioner of Pensions, states that Representative B. R. BUTLER, of that Congressional District, commenced his pension and bounty speculations in October, 1867; and among the serious charges against him is that he procured back-pay and allowances to the amount of $400, but gave only $40 to the widow in whose behalf it was obtained. Further, that he made a business of having bills passed by Congress, the recipients of the benefits paying him one-half of the sum; and that he obtained a pension for a man who had served as a Confederate soldier, never having been in the Union Army. BUTLER and his son keep a store, and compel those for whom the father receives pensions to take out the amount in groceries at a large advance over the usual price. A. H. PETTIBONE, it is stated, will be the Republican candidate for Congress, and that ANDREW JOHNSON will yet be the candidate of the Democrats, though "JIM" WHITE now has "the inside track."

The Election—Result in the First Congressional District.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 6.—The election returns from the First District show an increased Democratic gain and a Democratic victory.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Habeas Corpus from a United States Court to Produce Kirk's Prisoners—Arrest of Turner, of the Raleigh Sentinel—The Election.

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 7.—GEO. W. BROOKS, Judge of the United States District Court, in the District of North Carolina, has issued a writ of habeas corpus for all citizens now held by Col. KIRK, under the order of Gov. HOLDEN, to appear before him at Salisbury, where he opens the Court to-morrow. The United States Marshal leaves to-night to serve the writ.... J. TURNER, editor of the Raleigh Sentinel, was arrested at his home in Stilsboro', Orange County, which county has never been declared in a state of insurrection, by a detachment of Holden's militia from Alamance County.... The State has gone Democratic by a large majority, and from all appearances the Democrats have a two-thirds majority in both branches of the Legislature. The Democrats also elected five of the seven Congressmen.

THE EAST.

Almost a Riot in Boston—A Policeman Fires into a Crowd—Four Boys Wounded.

BOSTON, Aug. 7.—Last night, between 9 and 10 o'clock, in South Cove District, near the Old Colony Railroad Depot, there was disturbance, which threatened to become a serious riot. Policeman CLAYTON arrested a young boy named RICHARD BURKE, when a crowd collected, and an attempt was made to rescue him. The officer fired four shots into the crowd, all of which took effect, wounding seriously HUGH MCSHANE, only seven years old, in the back of the neck; a boy named HAYES, in the thigh; THOMAS DRISCOLL, thirteen years old, in the leg, and a little boy, name not known, in the left breast. A very large and excited crowd rushed to the scene, and brickbats and paving-stones began to fly pretty freely, but a force of Police arriving, the crowd dispersed.

THE WEST.

Progress of the Kansas Pacific Railroad—Desperadoes in Denver, Colorado—Lynch Law Proposed.

DENVER, Colorado, Aug. 5.—Four-and-a-quarter miles of track were laid on the Kansas-Pacific Railroad, yesterday, leaving a gap of only thirty-four miles, which will be closed next week. Garroting, fights and burglaries are becoming so frequent in this city that the people talk of organising a vigilance committee to hang a few of the desperadoes.

THE SOUTH.

Grass Worms in the Cotton Fields—Large Field of Corn—The American Dental Association.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 6.—The Little Rock (Ark.,) Gazette, says: We have read carefully our State exchanges, and find what was at first supposed to be the cotton worm proves to be the grass worm. Some little damage has been done, but with favorable weather during the next six weeks the cotton crop will prove satisfactory in every respect. Corn may be considered made, and the yield will be larger than any for years.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 7.—The American Dental Association has changed the place of the next annual meeting from Atlanta, Ga., to White Sulphur Springs, Va.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

ELMIRA, Aug. 7.—JARVIS LANGDON, a prominent resident of this city, died last evening after an illness of several months. He was widely known for his public and private liberality, and his decease causes general sorrow. His funeral will take place at 2 P. M. Monday. Business will be suspended at the time.

DUNKIRK, N. Y., Aug. 7.—President GRANT has appointed LEE L. HYDE Postmaster at this place, vice PATTERSON, removed. HYDE is a warm supporter of Senators for Congress.

INFALLIBILITY.

Scenes in the Council at Rome—Efforts of the Minority Bishops.

The Rome correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, writes under date of July 18:

This morning the Council of the Vatican held its fourth public session in the presence and under the presidency of the Pope. There were very few spectators, and but two or three of the minor powers were represented in the diplomatic tribune, the rest of the diplomatic body having followed the example of the representatives of France, Austria, and Prussia, who, in accordance with the intention mentioned in my last, absented themselves from the ceremony. The Vatican made a strong whip for the majority, and brought together 533 prelates, though the number was largely made up of Bishops in partibus. A hundred and ten Bishops now in Rome refused to attend the sitting, the bold policy of signifying their dissent by a public vote having, as I anticipated, been given up. The dogmatic constitution, De Ecclesia Christi, with the chapter defining infallibility, was put to the vote, and only two Bishops were found courageous enough to exercise their veto "from places." These sentiments were Monsignor Riccio, Bishop of Cajazzo, in Sicily, and an American Bishop, whose name I was unable to learn. The superstitious consider it ominous that a violent storm burst over the cathedral at the commencement of the proceedings, and lasted till their close. The orders for a salve from Sort St. Angelo and a jubilant peal from all the bells of Rome had been countermanded, but the solemnity was not unheralded, and the Pope proclaimed himself infallible amid peals of thunder and terrific flashes of lightning.

The Pope closed the proceedings with a short allocution. Immediately after the proclamation of the dogma the Austrian Ambassador quitted Rome. The officers and soldiers of the Roman legion have, since the outbreak of the war, unanimously demanded permission to return to France.

On Saturday, the Bishops of the minority held a conference in the apartments of Cardinal RAUSCHER, and after a long debate sent a deputation to the commission for dogma with a conciliatory proposition relative to infallibility. This was rejected by the Commission, and the deputation then obtained an interview with the Pope. Here they were equally unsuccessful, and the Holy Father peremptorily refused to make the slightest modification in the scheme. He was no doubt well informed as to the wavering spirit of the Bishops, which soon showed itself clearly in a resolution to absent themselves from the public sitting, where, in fact, they had but to vote non placet to achieve all they desired. They are meeting the proclamation of the dogma by a protest which they sign stante pede, but in Rome they and their protest are alike regarded with indifference.

WASHINGTON.

Suicide of Another Frenchman—A Sad Life—Frauds on Soldiers—Reports on Cuba—Mrs. Lincoln and War Pensions.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The Pension Office has learned that claim agents in various sections are writing to their clients, wherever rates heretofore agreed upon fall below the schedule of fees lately published, assuring them that it is necessary to immediately forward a new agreement at advanced rates. Claimants should know that nothing of the kind is needed, and further, that the Commissioner revises all fees under the new law, and cuts down such as he deems unfair. The office has a list of over fifty firms which it has detected in making excessive charges, and in most cases the money has been refunded. Those who refuse to repay are to be prosecuted. A number of arrests are soon to be made, where the agents have retained checks for bounty to the extent of the fees.

SUICIDE OF ANOTHER FRENCHMAN.

The Private Secretary of the Counselor of the French Legation committed suicide yesterday afternoon by shooting himself with a pistol just below the heart. He lived about four hours after doing the deed. He left letters saying that he was sick in body and mind, and wanted the rest and peace he hoped to find in the grave. He was a Count, and belonged to one of the first families of France, but had lived in this country several years under an assumed name, and his secret was known to but a few intimate friends. He served with credit in our army during the war, and had a very complimentary letter from Gen. GRANT for services in the Vicksburg campaign. For the last year he has held a clerkship in the Interior Department. He was a person of culture and good habits. Two or three years ago he married a lady in Brooklyn, who represented herself as a widow, saying that her husband had been killed in the war. Some months afterward he made his appearance, coming from Havana. The three had a talk and an amicable understanding; the woman returned to her first husband, and the French gentlemen came to Washington and ultimately married here again without getting a divorce from the first woman. Her husband recently died in New-York, and she was then anxious to regain the Frenchman, and has been in this city of late. It is presumed by his friends that the complications arising out of this matter led him to commit suicide. He was a modest and unassuming gentleman, and was held in esteem by those who knew him. He did not leave much property, but had an insurance of $5,000 on his life, taken out a month or six weeks ago.

REPORTS FROM CUBA.

The Spanish Minister was over here a day or two ago. Dispatches, which he received the middle of last week from Havana, reported things as going on well in Cuba. Arrangements are making to elect Deputies during the Fall for seats in the Spanish Cortes, and it is presumed they will be received as those from Porto Rico were received last Spring. The term of service of a considerable proportion of the troops on the island is about to expire, and this is why more are to be sent over from Spain. There is no intention at present of increasing the force, DE RODAS saying that it is not necessary.

THE TWO RESCUED INDIAN GIRLS.

It will be remembered that the last session of Congress passed an act, naming two girls recovered from the Kiowa Indians, HELEN and HELOISE LINCOLN, and appropriated $5,000 to support them. They were taken to an asylum in this District and baptized with their new names, the older girl protesting that she had been baptized once, and that her name was HELEN KIRKPATRICK. The family and friends have sent such evidence here as to fully identify the children, and they are to be returned, Congressional names and all.

COTTON CAPTURED DURING THE WAR.

A decree was recently issued by the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, reversing a former decree of the Court ordering that money resulting from cotton captured by the Red River expedition during the war, be paid over to the Navy Pension fund. The last decree orders money to be distributed to the captors, but the Attorney-General decided on the 1st inst. that as the money had been placed in the Treasury by the first decree, the Court had no further jurisdiction over it, and it must go to the Pension fund.

MRS. LINCOLN AND HER PENSION.

One of the papers here notes that a gentleman in Philadelphia has read a letter from Mrs. LINCOLN, in grateful acknowledgement of the action of Congress in voting her a pension of $3,000 per year. She is in Germany, and will remain there for the present. Her case is so exceptional in character that the Pension Office will facilitate her in drawing the money as it becomes due.

THE UNITED STATES TO FRANCE.

The State Department yesterday acknowledged a communication of the French Minister, notifying our Government of the declaration of war against Prussia. It contains reference to the completeness of our neutrality, and an assurance that the United States would exert itself to enforce all their provisions with strictest impartiality.

POLITICAL.

Another Candidate for Governor of New York.

The Binghamton (N. Y.) Republican nominates Major-Gen. JOHN C. ROBINSON, of Broome County, as a candidate for Governor of the State of New-York. "We need a soldier for our standard-bearer," says the editor. "He should be one of the noblest Romans of them all; a man who has stood in the fore-front, whose heart was in the cause, and who sees that in the political contest of today the most vital principles are at stake—though in a lesser degree—that were involved in the rebellion. With a candidate who would unite all Republicans, and bring all the soldiers without regard to party to his support, we should have a good prospect of success."

Gen. ROBINSON's record as a soldier covers a period of nearly thirty-five years. Beginning his military education in 1835, he served in Florida, in the Western States and Territories; in Mexico, participating in the battles of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma and Monterey; in the rebellion, first protecting Fort McHenry, which had, so to speak, only a handful of men, from seizure by the citizens of Baltimore, and keeping its guns turned on the city; then made Colonel of the first regiment enlisted in Michigan; soon raised to the command of a brigade; fighting in KEARNEY's division."

Supposed Abduction—Mysterious Disappearance of a Young Girl from Louisville, Ky.

The Courier-Journal of the 5th inst. says:

"On last Saturday afternoon, between 5 and 6 o'clock, Miss MARY BELLE DEWITT, aged sixteen years, mysteriously disappeared from her home, No. 186 East Market-street, between Preston and Jackson, where her father keeps a tavern known as 'The Farmer's Home.' For some months a number of hucksters from Indiana have been in the habit of stopping with Mr. DEWITT, and it is thought that among the number there is one who has endeavored to accomplish her ruin by enticing her away from home. The circumstances, so far as known, regarding her leaving home, are about as follows: On a recent visit to this city the huckster suspected of enticing her away was very attentive to her, and after his departure from the city a correspondence between the young lady and him was carried on, and it is supposed that an arrangement was made to abduct her. She left her house as stated above, remarking to a servant in the house that she was going out shopping and would return in an hour. She did not return that night or Sunday night, and on Monday her father set out on a journey into Indiana in search of her. On the New-Albany ferry-boat he ascertained that a wagon containing a girl of her description had crossed on Saturday, unaccompanied by any one, and that on the same day a wagon of the right description had crossed on the same boat, but at different times. Mr. DEWITT hastily pursued the fleeing parties, and upon the road ascertained from persons that a wagon, containing a man and girl answering the description of the fugitives, had passed various points. The father succeeded in tracing his daughter to a point just this side of Fredericksburg, Ind., where all trace of the missing girl was lost. He then went twelve miles beyond that village to the house of the man whom, he thought, had inveigled her away from home, and, upon accusing the man, he denied all knowledge of the affair. Mr. DEWITT then retraced his steps toward this city, and when he arrived at Fredericksburg again he found a man who had seen the girl in the wagon with the huckster, and knew that she had gone beyond Fredericksburg. Mr. DEWITT returned home yesterday almost heart-broken at the thought of giving up his daughter in such a mysterious manner, but says that he intends continuing the search. The name of the man who is supposed to be the abductor is well known, and on his arrival in the city today will be arrested. Mr. DEWITT and family are very respectable, and recently removed to this city from Washington County, and engaged in the hotel business. The missing girl is rather heavy set, has dark-red hair, blue eyes, very forward, and rather a pleasant look. Mr. DEWITT offers a reward of $50 to any person giving information by which her whereabouts can be traced."

THE RIVER RHINE.

Reminiscences of a Tour on that Historical River.

The following reminiscences, by a reporter of the TIMES, of a tour made on the Rhine valley when he was a student at the University of Heidelberg, may prove of interest to our readers at the present time:

The Rhine rises in Switzerland, flows through the Lake of Constance, passes the Falls at Schaffhausen, and flowing from east to west constitutes for some distance the boundary between Switzerland and Germany, (Baden.) At Basel, Switzerland, where it is bridged, it then takes a northerly course, forming the boundary between France and Germany, (Baden.) From where the Lauter River, on the west side, empties into the Rhine at the southern boundary of Rhenish Bavaria, the Rhine ceases to wash France. Thence it flows in a northerly and north-westerly direction all the way through Germany, till it enters near Nymegen, Holland, the latter country, where it is divided into several branches, and empties into the North Sea. The principal French city near the Rhine is Strasbourg, through which city the River Ill flows, emptying a little way below into the Rhine, on its west side. Strasbourg, numbering fifty and some odd thousand inhabitants, is strongly fortified, and connected with Kehl, on the right (German) bank of the Rhine, by a bridge. On the German (Baden) side, opposite France there are several small cities on the Rhine. Rastadt, near which city is the renowned watering-place, Baden-Baden, and also Carlsruhe, the capital of Baden, both situated several miles off the Rhine. Nearly opposite Carlsruhe, where, on the west side, the Lauter River empties into the Rhine, is the southern boundary line of Rhenish Bavaria, (Palatinate) which is altogether west of the Rhine. That part of the Palatinate (German "Pfalz") between the Haardt Mountains and the river is distinguished for its fertility and excellent vineyards. Renowned for their vineyards are also Wachenheim, Forst and Deidesheim. The scenery along the Hardt Mountains is exceedingly fine, and many a castle in ruins on these mountains looks toward the Rhine. The principal cities of Rhenish Bavaria, Neustadt, Landau, Zweibruecken and Spires—have each from 8,000 to 10,000 inhabitants, while Kaiserslautern has about 15,000. These are all wealthy cities. Spires is renowned on account of historical events which occurred there and also for its cathedral. Beside those cities the Palatinate is covered with a large number of towns and villages. Mannheim, situated on the right bank of the Rhine, and the chief commercial city of Baden, numbering twenty and some odd thousand inhabitants, the Neckar, one of the chief tributaries of the Rhine, empties into it on the east side. On the Neckar, whose banks are covered with vines, the following principal cities are situated: Tuebingen, renowned for the university; Stuttgart, the capital of Wurtemberg; Heilbronn, and Heidelberg, also renowned for its university, and Mannheim—the latter at the confluence of the Rhine and Neckar. At the latter city the Rhine is bridged, connecting it with Ludwigshafen, in Rhenish Bavaria. Further on, Worms, a city of about 19,000 inhabitants, renowned in history from LUTHER's Reformation, is situated on the left bank of the Rhine. Following the course of the river the next large city on it, situated on the left bank is Mayence, (German, Mainz.) There opposite the city on the east side of the Main River, the largest of the tributaries of the Rhine, empties into it. A few miles above Coblentz, on the east side, the Lahn empties into the Rhine. On the Lahn, only a short distance from its mouth, is the now historical watering-place of Ems, located in a narrow valley, between high bluffs. The City of Coblentz (German, "Coblenz,") numbering about 30,000 inhabitants, is situated on the left bank of the Rhine, where the Moselle River, one of its principal tributaries, empties into it. The Moselle receives in its upper course the Saar River. The Moselle comes from France, and on it the French fortresses, Mets and Thionville, are situated. The chief German city located on this river is Treves, (German, "Trier.") On the banks of the Moselle also grow famous wines. Both the Rhine and Moselle are bridged at Coblentz. This city is a strong fortress, and opposite the city, on the right bank of the Rhine, on a rocky bluff, is the German Gibraltar, the Fortress Ehrenbreitstein. Coblentz ranks equal with Bingen in the magnificence of its beautiful scenery. From the ramparts of the Fortress Ehrenbreitstein a view is presented to the eye which is rarely equaled anywhere on the Rhine. From Stolzenfels the valley widens again. Below Coblentz prominent places on the Rhine are Neuwied, Andernach and Sinzig, near which latter city the Ahr River, particularly renowned for the wine growing in its valley, empties into the Rhine on its left side. Further below, on the right bank of the Rhine, is Koenigswinter. Near this place, on the right side of the river, is the Siebengebirge, a mountain range with seven distinct peaks, of which the Drachenfels (dragon-rock) and Oelberg (olive mountain) are the highest. In the neighborhood there is an island called Nonnenwerth in the river, and opposite to it on the left bank is the ruin Rolandseck. That part of the Rhine Valley also competes in beauty with Bingen and Coblentz. From both the Drachenfels and Rolandseck the finest view of the immediate neighborhood is obtained, while from the former, one overlooks the Rhine Valley for many miles up and down, with its numberless thrifty cities, towns and villages. The finest vineyards are to be seen in that part of the valley. A few miles below Koenigswinter is the City of Bonn, situated on the left bank of the Rhine. This city numbers about 18,000 inhabitants, and is noted for its University and fine scenery. The city was the birth-place of BEETHOVEN, and has a bronze monument of the great composer. Opposite Bonn the Sieg River empties on the east side into the Rhine. The next large city below on the Rhine, on its left bank, is Cologne, (German, "Koeln.") This is one of the oldest and historically most renowned cities of Germany, numbering about 100,000 inhabitants. Its cathedral is considered a wonder of architecture. The Rhine is bridged there, connecting Cologne with Deutz. The river is deepest and has its most rapid current there. The banks are level now, and remain so to the mouth of the river. Another large German city on the right bank of the Rhine, below Cologne, is Duesseldorf, numbering about 36,000 inhabitants. Above this city the Erft River empties on the west side, and, below, at Ruhrort the Ruhr River, and at Wesel, the Lippe River, both on the east side, into the Rhine. The Rhinelanders, meaning the German living in those parts of Germany near and on the Rhine, are of course by common language and literature, linked with and kindred to the rest of the German people. When, in 1840, under LOUIS PHILIPPE, the cession of the German territory, west of the Rhine, to France was talked about by the French, a poem was written by a German named NICOLAUS BECKER, which was received with the greatest enthusiasm in Germany. It commenced with the following verse, translated, in rhyme:

"The French shall not have it, swear we all,
The free, the German Rhine,
Although they much covet it,
Like wolves they for it whine."

The last verse ended with the assurance that the French would not get the Rhine are the last German slain would rest on its bottom.

THE TORNADO DISASTER.

Explosion on Lake Ontario—Three Men Killed—Statement of Capt. Ferris.

From the Oswego Press, Aug. 6.

About 3 o'clock this morning many of our citizens were awakened by a sharp explosion, which is described as sounding as though a safe had been blown open, but only a few were seriously disturbed about it. Later, however, intelligence was received that the tug Tornado, of SMITH & FOOT's line, had blown up about 5 mile and ½ out, and that Capt. MANWARRING and two others were killed. As soon as possible the reporters obtained an interview with Capt. GEO. N. FERRIS, who was aboard the Tornado, and from whom we get the following statement of the terrible affair: About 3 o'clock this morning, the Tornado steamed out of the harbor, being a night boat, to lie in wait for vessels that required towing in. Aboard of her were Capt. W. H. MANWARING, the officer in command; Capt. GEO. N. FERRIS, formerly of the Franklin, but who was lately transferred to the Tornado, and alternated With Capt. MANWARRING—MOSES ACKERSON, engineer, PATRICK CLARK, fireman, ZEBULON STONE, deck hand, and MARY STONE, cook. They ran up opposite Sheldon's Point, and lay to about a mile and a half off shore. About 3 o'clock it appears they were about starting out, and Capt. MANWARRING was at the wheel in the wheel-house, STONE sat forward on the look-out, the cook was below in the cabin, and FERRIS and CLARK were sitting on the fan tail at the rear of the boat. FERRIS says as the engineer started her up, and when she had taken about two revolutions, a terrific explosion, and the whole of the boat, except the stern on which he and CLARK were sitting, was blown off and into a thousand fragments. It was very dark, and he could see no specific objects, and heard no sound except the whizzing of the fragments of the boat through the air, and the splashing as they struck the water. CLARK was struck by a piece of board, and appeared to be hurt, and as the part they were standing on began to sink, FERRIS made CLARK jump overboard first. He followed, and quickly securing some floating pieces, made a raft and placed CLARK on it and climbed on himself. At dawn he heard a piercing shriek, and the cook came to the surface near them, clinging to a piece of the cabin. She called to FERRIS by name, asked if the men were all right and said she was safe. Capt. FERRIS rigged up a signal of distress, and about half-past 8 the tug Dodge, Capt. TWEEDY, descried it and bore down to the relief. The cook was found to be burned some, and her nervous system greatly shocked. Several rugs have been cruising about the scene of the disaster, but the bodies of Capt. MANWARING, the engineer, and Mr. STONE, have not been found, and they must have been blown to atoms or else sent to the bottom by the explosion. Mr. STONE's room was torn and covered with blood, was found floating on the water near the spot, but nothing else was to be seen except the splintered fragments of the boat. The persons drowned are Capt. W. H. MANWARING, of this city, aged about forty-five, whose family, consisting of a wife and one daughter, live on East Second-street, between Oneida and Mohawk; ZEBULON STONE, brother of NELSON STONE, unmarried, and aged about twenty-seven; MOSES ACKERSON, aged about twenty-three, unmarried, and parents living back of Brockville, Ontario. The saddest part of this affair is that it was the result of gross carelessness on the part of the engineer, who had been asleep, and had allowed the water to get too low in the boiler, thus causing the explosion and loss of life. ACKERSON has gone to his account—he has dearly paid the forfeit of his negligence, and it is not our part to utter words of censure. He was an experienced and capable engineer, and ran the tug at Saginaw, where she was employed last year. The Tornado was a first-class tug-boat, and was built by MILLER, KITTS & MOORE, of Oswego. She was valued at $12,000, and was not insured.

Dueling at San Francisco—A Sporting Man Shot and Killed.

The Alta California of July 31 says: "Between 3 and 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon intense excitement was created on Montgomery-street, the immediate cause being the shooting of JAMES DOBSON by JOHN TYLER, both sporting men. JIM DOBSON has been in this city a number of years. Possessed of a quick temper, he had an ambition to strike terror into those of his own ilk, always armed. He has often, on the slightest provocation, drawn a knife or pistol and made threats to kill. He figured prominently in prize fights and at Democratic primaries. On the night of the Rudolphs-Deery billiard match for the championship, at the Pavilion, a few months since, TYLER acted the part of a bully. Just as RUDOLPHS was about running out the game, having but one or two to go, DOBSON stepped up to the billiard-table, picked up the balls, threw them among the audience, and boldly defied any one in the house to interfere with him. The greatest excitement prevailed for a few minutes, and order was restored only by DEERY, who induced DOBSON to leave. JOHN TYLER is also a member of the sporting fraternity, and has acted as referee in several billiard matches. He is represented as being of a quiet disposition, cool and brave—one who would not be browbeaten. It is also said that he has befriended DOBSON on numerous occasions, and had been on good terms with him until recently. From parties acquainted with both men, we learn that a few evenings since DOBSON made a 'winning' of several hundred dollars at a faro game. TYLER was present, and being short of funds, requested the loan of a few dollars from DOBSON, which was refused. TYLER felt aggrieved at this apparent repudiation of friendship, but said no more about it. On Friday night they met again at a demi monde masquerade ball. DOBSON during the evening fired a shot into the ceiling in an adjoining room; it was noticed, but was quietly dispersed, no damage being done to any one. DOBSON then went up to TYLER, and asked him for a light for his cigar. The latter refused, remarking, 'I don't like you.' Words passed between the two, and serious trouble would then have resulted but for the interference of several officers. A reconciliation was effected, and subsequently made that they should meet each other the next day, and settle the matter on sight. TYLER and DOBSON met yesterday afternoon for the first time, on Montgomery-street, near Pine. As they approached each other, DOBSON, it is said, drew his pistol, and pointing at TYLER, said anything 'Are you ready?' The latter replied that he was unarmed, when DOBSON told him to go and prepare himself for their next meeting. It appears that TYLER had understood from friends of DOBSON that the difficulty had been settled and there was no necessity for any further trouble, and that DOBSON and his opponent was bent on an affray, and knowing his desperate character, went to his room and armed himself with a six-shooter.

A few minutes before 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the two met again on Montgomery-street, a few doors from the Metropolitan Hotel. As the latter, Mr. HOUSE, and they came close to each other, TYLER remarked to DOBSON, 'Draw,' and as DOBSON attempted to do so TYLER fired a shot, which entered DOBSON's left side. Both clinched, and, while in that condition, TYLER fired another shot, which took effect in DOBSON's right side. DOBSON then was a few feet behind TYLER, when the latter took him be draw; and before he could get between them the shots were fired. He instantly seized TYLER, and took him to the Station-house, followed by a large crowd. DOBSON staggered, and was caught by a number of men and carried to a drug-store. The ball first fired passed through the flappel of his coat, through the body, and was picked up in the back. The second ball, fired into the left side, passed upward and came out in the breast, about two inches to the right of where the first entered. When told by the attending physicians if he had any arrangements to make he had better do so, DOBSON said, 'Send for COLLINGS. Tell him to write to my mother.' He subsequently said, 'I did not think TYLER would murder me.' He was surrounded by several friends, and after lingering for about half an hour, he expired."

The Riot at Harrodsburg, Ky.—Five Men Killed and Several Wounded.

The Louisville Courier-Journal of the 6th inst. says: From a gentleman who arrived in the city from Harrodsburg, Ky., on yesterday, we learn the following particulars of a bloody affair in that town on Monday last:

A large number of negroes were in the town, and all of them were voting the Radical ticket. White Radicals were at the polls and challenged every Democratic voter. The election passed off quietly until about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when a difficulty arose between a young man named S. R. P. LAWRENCE and a negro. They engaged in a hand-to-hand fight, and a short distance from the Court-house LAWRENCE shot the negro, and then cut his throat, nearly severing his head from his body, killing him instantly. The fight created great excitement, and in a short time about 200 negroes, armed with muskets and shot-guns, collected in the vicinity of the Court-house, and one of them shot LAWRENCE through the body, inflicting a wound from which he died instantly. A shot fired by the negroes struck a young man, son of Mr. GEORGE JOHNSON, who was sitting near the bank, and who had taken no part in the affair, killing him instantly. W. H. HAWKINS (white) was seriously wounded, and MATT BRADSHAW (white) had his throat cut with a ball. About one dozen white men were engaged in the difficulty. Several others, beside the above named, were slightly injured. Two negroes were mortally wounded, and have since died, and eight or ten others were wounded. The whites were armed only with pistols. At least 500 shots were fired. The negroes then retreated toward the suburbs of the town, when the peaceably-disposed citizens interfered and quelled the disturbance, and placed a strong guard over the town. The most intense excitement prevailed, and the city riot was very nearly renewed on Tuesday by the attempt of young HAWKINS to shoot a negro named SHEARD, whom he accused of having killed LAWRENCE. The negro seized the pistol just as HAWKINS was about to fire, and held it until Col. CHENOWETH and others succeeded in disarming HAWKINS. It is said that both of the parties between whom the difficulty originated were under the influence of liqu

THE COAL TRADE.

More About the Resumption of Work in the Collieries.

From the Philadelphia Telegraph, Aug. 6.

The miners of Schuylkill have generally resumed work during the past week, some collieries commencing on Monday, some on Tuesday, and some on Thursday. The basis, of course, is the new one just agreed upon, with the sliding scale downward as well as upward, excepting a slight alteration in the clause for the equalization of contract work, which was demanded by the miners of some of the collieries and conceded by the operators. No one, even those most directly benefitted, can blame them for objecting to such an unjust rule, as that which their leaders have placed upon them. It cannot be believed that this is a spontaneous offer of the men made with certain ends in view. Those who uphold the action of the rulers of the W. B. A. in this only show either their great foolishness, or that they are too lazy to do a large amount of contract work. Certainly the best men, who are able and willing to do the largest amount of work, and to make the most money, would never consent to it. But perhaps, as has been suggested, the whole thing was merely a sop thrown to the operators to keep them quiet and get the collieries started, it being intended to oppose it afterward. But as it is understood that some have resumed without making such opposition, they should take fair warning that if they agree to it as once they agree to it for good, and should the operators wish to hold them to it, they would have just cause for doing so.

The present condition of some of the miners in pecuniary prosperity after the long strike is said to be pitiable in the extreme. If this be so, we hope that they have had enough of unions. If every man who has been injured by the false government of the rulers of the W. B. A., or who has been compelled to stop work against his own inclination, would immediately cut loose from all connection with the association, regardless for the time being of the name of "black-leg," there is very little doubt but that a comparatively small, and certainly powerless, remnant would be left to uphold the unjust commands of the organization. With so many "black-legs," the name would cease to be a reproach, and become an honor, and it will be more rather than less difficult to discriminate with suspicion. We doubt not but that sufficient employment could be found, notwithstanding the opposing edicts of the union.

If then if anything does not suit the miners, if wages go below a living rate, let them stop work individually and collectively, as a union, or as a trade-union cease, or leave the trade for more profitable employment until a sufficient number only remain to produce a higher rate. By such a course of action they would be regarded as honorable men, and their demands would in all probability be complied with. But let us have no more of working rules, unions, or regulations for forcing any price, unjust or otherwise, upon the market, no more organized strikes for fancied or trivial wrongs, which always result to the injury of the strikers in the end.

The strike of the Lehigh miners against the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company has been concluded by one of the most signal failures to be found anywhere in the history of mining. The men have not gained one single point by their long season of idleness, and have been compelled to resume work on exactly the same terms which were offered to them by the company in the first place. This, though not very satisfactory to the men, will teach them a lesson. But the most beneficial results will flow from the example set the Scuylkill men, who, without the dissatisfied feelings of those in Lehigh, which may result in another strike of some sort before very long, will feel more forcibly the great risk of success attending such movements, and the great loss on all sides which always accompanies them.

There is said to be a good deal of hard feeling occasioned by the closing of the shipping ports of Port Carbon and Mount Carbon, on the Schuylkill Canal, by the Reading Railroad, and the removal of the business to Schuylkill Haven; but there appears to be no reason in the matter, as the Reading Railroad is perfectly strong enough at the present time in that particular to do as they likes.

The return of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad for the past week, published yesterday, shows the already large and rapid resumption as beginning to be made manifest by the increased production and the amount shipped.

At Mauch Chunk during the past week there were shipped over the Lehigh Valley and Lehigh and Susquehanna Railroads and the canal 116,380.08 tons, against 104,656.04 tons the previous week, an increase of 13,593.04 tons. The shipments for the corresponding week last year were 131,947.03 tons, a decrease for the week of 1870 of 15,566.15 tons.

The Philadelphia market is active, and there is good demand. This is in part owing to the low rates of freights to coast points, which will probably be advanced in a short time. The following are the current rates for freights from Port Richmond for the week ending Aug. 5: Boston, $2 90@3 15; Newburyport, $2 10; Provincetown, $2 25; Salem, $2@2 15; Somerset, $1 75; Weymouth, $2; Providence, $1 75@1 85; Allen's Point, $1 75@1 80; Norwalk, $1 75; Greenport, $1 60; New York, $1 40. From Baltimore—Philadelphia, $1@1 05; New-York, $1 55@1 90.

The following are the prices of coal by the cargo at Port Richmond for shipments east of Bordentown and south of Cape Henry; to other points rates are forty cents per ton higher:

Schuylkill Red Ash, $4 50@4 75; do. Steam-boat, $4 50@4 60; do. Broken, $4 50@4 70; do. Egg, $4 50@4 70; do. Stove, $4 50@4 70; do. Chestnut, $4 50@4 70. Shenandoah Steam-boat, $4 75; do. Broken, $4 75; do. Egg, $4 75; do. Stove, $4 75; do. Chestnut, $4.

A Case of Bigamy at Chicago—A Philadelphia Widow and a Western Heiress.

From the Chicago Republican, Aug. 5.

Yesterday afternoon it was the fate of Justice WEISHIP to adjudicate upon a case of bigamy. About five years ago, there wandered to the City of Philadelphia, down East, an American Tenton, by name ANDREAS WALZ. He was young, fleshy, and said to be good-looking. WALZ had an inclination toward widows, and being matrimonially inclined, resolved on looking up some fascinating survivor of a dead husband's affection. Mrs. VERANA SAAGER answered the spirit of WALZ's dream, and more than answered it, for she had a neat little fortune of $10,000 or so—the mortal remains of SAAGER, deceased. The charms of the widow and her money were too great for WALZ, so he fell in love with, and married both. His affection for the dollars, however, strange as it may appear, survived his affection for the charming relict of the money-making SAAGER. The pair had been married by Rev. Mr. ROSENSCH, of Philadelphia, on the 19th day of February, 1866. Six weeks subsequent to that time the adventurer WALZ became non est, as did the bulk of his wife's money. After her lord's disappearance, Mrs. WALZ said nothing to her neighbors, and allowed them to suppose that she had been divorced by her quondam husband. Owing to this, hints of foul play were freely indulged in, and most people imagined that WALZ had come to an untimely end. The twice made widow sighed for her sad fate a little while, but sought consolace in the way of loving and being loved. She took the matter very philosophically, and attended to her profession of millinery with praiseworthy industry. About two weeks ago, the Philadelphia widow removed to Gilmansky in pursuit of fortune and peace of mind. About the middle of July a paragraph appeared in the City papers stating that that lady had been taken suddenly ill—struck, while waiting for the street cars on the corner of Randolph and Desplaines streets. The lady was taken to a neighboring drug store, and went home after recovering her senses. She did not give her name. In the Justice Court on yesterday afternoon the mystery was cleared up. The lady who was overcome by the heat was Mrs. VERANA SAAGER alias WALZ. It was not the sun that struck her down. It was something worse. It was the infuriating sight of her long lost but unprincipled husband, arm in arm upon the sidewalk with a lady young and fair!

The wronged lady two days after having looked upon the apparition before described, walked upon a lawyer and asked his advice in the matter. The affair was given into the hands of Constable HARTMAN, and he, by aid of a photograph, went in pursuit of the truant husband. After diligent search he managed to find trace of the fugitive. It was discovered that WALZ has been "married" in this city on the 19th of August last year to a Miss FRANCISCA BRUNDA. Constable HARTMAN informed the lawyer of these facts, whereupon the legal personage had an affidavit of bigamy sworn out against WALZ, and the latter was immediately arrested. The scene in the justice office was at once exciting and interesting. The feminine rivals met each other with decided fury, but the latest wife clung to the culprit with all the ardor of young affection.

Justice WEISHIP having heard the evidence admitted WALZ to bail in $1,000, to appear for trial before the Recorder's Court. The young wife offered to pay the money down if they would only "let the darling" go, but the bail would not or could not be accepted. Some male friends of the accused finally came to the rescue, and he went away with the young wife in a state of intense pleasure. The abandoned wife-widow looked pale and sad, but submitted to her fate with a resignation becoming a woman who had had experience of two rounds of matrimonial martyrdom.

THE RIGHEIMER SCANDAL.—The Troy Press of the 6th inst. says: "The council which has been investigating the charges against Rev. Mr. RIGHEIMER, of the Brunswick Lutheran Church, has had but one meeting, and has not yet arrived at any conclusion in the matter. Another session will be held during the coming week. To-morrow Rev. Mr. RIGHEIMER is expected to preach as usual at his church in Brunswick, and in the afternoon will preach before the Lutheran congregation of this city. The charges against him thus far simply accuse him of taking liberties with some of the lady members of his congregation—such as inviting them to sit upon his knee, kissing them, and sundry indiscretions especially noticeable in the case of a clergyman. Rev. Mr. RIGHEIMEYER, it appears, does not deny these charges, but deems them of no serious import, as they Love, Elopement, Marriage and Death. The Romantic History of a Girl of Seventeen.

The Cincinnati Enquirer (Mich.), Aug. 2, says: A correspondent is responsible for the death of Mrs. MARIE MATILDA KENNY, wife of CHAUNCEY H. MILLS, a resident of this city, in Cleveland, a short time since, calls to mind a few incidents connected with her love and marriage that smack somewhat of the romantic, not to say sensational. Her parents were well-to-do, respectable people, residing in the State of New York, and surrounded their daughter with all the luxuries and comforts that heart could desire. She was apparently happy and contented at home until 1862, when she chanced to meet the person who afterward became her husband. Being of a pleasing disposition, and withal fair looking, he gained her affections, which ripened into love. She formed a resolution to leave her parents, her happy and luxurious home, and elope with the man of her choice, with whom she was yet but slightly acquainted. They did not leave her home together, MILLS started some hours ahead of her. He went to Cleveland, thence to Toledo, from there to Fremont, where he met the young lady. She there informed him that her brother was in pursuit, and to thwart detection he procured for her a suit of male attire, which she donned, going from Fremont to Toledo, where he found employment, and she went to peddling oranges on the street, and actually sold her brother one as he met her, he little dreaming that the little boy of fourteen was the sister whom he was in search of. From Toledo the pair went to Nashville, MILLS being an engineer, soon obtained a locomotive to run from the former place to Chattanooga, on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, the girl being his fireman. They had worked on the road but a short time before he received a wound by the rebels firing into the train. He was taken to the hospital, the following morning a nurse in which he had sufficiently recovered to travel to Cleveland. Their next appearance was at the Madoc gold mines, in Canada, they having caught the gold fever, which was raging at that time, and accordingly took up the life of miners. It being a wet season, nothing was done in the mines, and they returned to Cleveland. The excitement, hardships, and vicissitudes she had experienced and endured were too much: a fever ensued, and after a short illness she died.

Robbing the Mail.

The Washington Chronicle says: Special Agent Capt. JOHN FREY, of the Post-office Department, recently arrested the late Assistant Postmaster at Romney, West Virginia, DAVID A. MARSHALL, upon the charge of abstracting $1,000 from registered letters. He was taken before the United States Commissioner at Wheeling, and held to bail in the sum of $1,000 for trial at the September term of the United States District Court at that place.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

A review of the transactions of the past week will cover no large amount of space, nor will a detailed report require much labor. No feature of note has marked the business of the week, and scarcely a ripple has disturbed the quiet surface of the market. At the Exchange but one sale has been made, and that on Tuesday, of a house and lot on Seventy-first-street, east of and near Fourth-avenue; sold by ROBERTS & MCGUIRE, for $21,962. Of suburban sales the only one attempted was by JOHNSON & MILLER, of lots at Cortlandt, N. J., on what is known as the "Berry Farm." This transaction was unfortunately interfered with by a shower when but comparatively few lots had been disposed of, and it became necessary to postpone the sale. Sixty-six city-sized lots were sold, however, bringing in the aggregate something over $10,000, and at an average price of $155 per lot. The above includes the transactions of the entire week. The sale of Evergreen Cemetery property, which was to have taken place in Brooklyn, was postponed until the 18th inst. The transfers of the week are in number 100, and the property thus represented is valued at $2,152,510.

The present week does not promise much better than the last. At the Exchange the business will be only nominal, as few sales are announced to take place, and these principally of a local character. The only suburban sale advertised, is by JOHNSON & MILLER, of 323 very desirable lots at New-Brunswick, N. J., on Wednesday. The property comprises the VAN NOSTRE farm, and from present indications the sale promises to be a great success. It will begin immediately upon the arrival of the special train which leaves the foot of Cortlandt-street at 12:10 A. M. The lots offered are situated almost in the centre of, and on the highest ground in the City, with excellent surroundings; streets graded, and every lot ready for immediate use. Livingston-avenue, bounding the farm on the south, and Remsen-avenue running near the northerly line, are each five wide thoroughfares, and Powers, Howard, Talmadge, Ward, Lawrence, and Fulton streets, all laid down on the City map, are opened, graded, and run through the property. The advantages offered by this sale are numerous. New-Brunswick has already a population of 30,000 persons. Rutgers College, a growing educational institution, is here located, and of late such a spirit of improvement has seized upon the town, that it promises to grow rapidly in wealth, population and importance. As furnishing an excellent opportunity for the safe investment of capital, a chance is offered at Tuesday's sale which should attract attention. The lots will be sold without reserve, and the terms attached to the transaction are liberal. Maps, passes and all needful information can be obtained of the auctioneers, No. 25 Nassau-street.

The foregoing is the only public sale thus far noticed, but to those desiring to purchase property at private sale, attention is called to the large number of advertisements which appear daily in the columns of the TIMES. These it will be well for those intending to invest to consult before making their selection of a location for a home.

THE FARM,
situated almost in the centre of, and on the highest ground in the city, with excellent surroundings; streets all graded, and every lot ready for immediate use, must prove a profitable investment to purchasers in the growing city of New-Brunswick, bounding the farm on the south, and Remsen-av. running near its northerly line, are each fine wide thoroughfares. Powers, Howard, Talmadge, Ward, Lawrence, and Fulton sts., all laid down on the City map, are opened, graded, and run through the property.

A volume could easily be written of the advantages of New-Brunswick as a place of residence; situated on the Raritan River, and the finest agricultural portion of the State, the cost of living is fully twenty per cent. less than in New-York, or any of its adjacent cities, while its communications with all points is unsurpassed by twenty-eight daily trains. No place in Westchester County can be so readily reached, and at as low rates of commutation, viz: $60 per annum. New-Brunswick contains a population of 30,000. This sale of Evergreen Cemetery property, which was to have taken place in Brooklyn, was postponed until the 18th inst. The transfers of the week are in number 100, and the property thus represented is valued at $2,152,510.

E. A. LAWRENCE, Auctioneer,
TO MANUFACTURERS AND OTHERS.

IMPORTANT PEREMPTORY SALE
BY AUCTION OF
900 BUILDING LOTS AND PLOTS
IN THE CITY OF SCRANTON, PENN.,
On TUESDAY, Aug. 16, at 10 o'clock, on the premises, at Scranton, by LAWRENCE, OAKLEY & FLEURY.

Nine hundred beautifully located building lots, of 25 to 26 feet 4 inches front by 150 to 160 feet in depth, on avenues 80 feet in width, each lot having a back alley 20 feet in width.

These lots form the most beautiful portion of the city plot, gradually rising in slope several hundred feet, giving superb views from each of the blocks of many miles in extent.

For salubrity, beauty of its buildings, width of its avenues, together with its business and social advantages, Scranton offers rare inducements. From a population of about 9,000 persons, twelve years ago, it now numbers upward of sixty thousand.

A mountain stream of large volume crosses the property at an elevation sufficient to supply abundantly all the city with the purest water for domestic and manufacturing uses.

The particular attention of manufacturers and others is invited to this rare opportunity for profitable investment. Cost can be had for speedily coming per lots, and rare facilities and provisions at the lowest figures. Four or five trunk railroads centre here, being only four or five hours from New-York.

Terms of sale half cash, balance on liberal time, if desired, at six per cent. interest. Minutes hereafter digested.

Who They Are and How They Work—The Sneak at Bay Become a Burglar—Details of Classes and Modes of Operations—Lack of Statistics and What is to Blame.

Opinions differ as to the murderer of BENJAMIN NATHAN, but the fact that a large portion of the public believe, with a majority of the detectives engaged upon the case, that the tragedy of that night changed an ordinary sneak-thief into an assassin, renders some account of the unlawful intruders into our dwellings not only interesting but instructive.

It is an insult to a highly-accomplished fraternity to call any ordinary house-breaker a burglar. The name implies an amount of stealthy skill, a peculiar fitness for felonious appropriation of another's goods, which is possessed by very few, and is never wasted on the trivialities that may be expected to be obtained in the majority of houses. There are but a few scores of persons in the whole country who have the right to be called "professional burglars," and all of their time and ingenuity is exhausted by banks and warehouses, so that they have none of either to throw away on dwellings. They are the wholesale operators in stealing, and look down with the utmost contempt on the "duffers" and "snoozers" who are reduced to the extremity of picking up a precarious livelihood by carrying away, with infinite risk and labor, bulky articles of comparatively little value. Whenever an affair like the Ocean Bank burglary occurs, it is absolutely certain that the professional burglar has been at work, but when such a common-place affair as a seemingly adroit and daring house robbery is reported, whether the domicile be entered with or without violence, it is equally certain that no criminal of a higher grade than what is properly termed a sneak-thief, has been about.

But our citizens will be very unwise if they regard these sneak-thieves with the disdain that the burglars feel for them. They are enterprising in their way, and as their way is one which leads not only to our larders, cupboards and closets, but directly into the chambers where we are sleeping, it is one which we cannot afford to ignore. The sneak-thieves as a class are more of a pest than the burglars and despoil society to a greater extent. The burglars astonish the world at long intervals by some great successful crime, when property worth hundreds of thousands of dollars is carried away, but the sneak-thieves are constantly committing lesser depredations, and the yearly aggregate of their thefts is always greater than that of the burglar. There is not a night in the year that they do not enter houses in the City and get safely away with something of value, a very small proportion of which is ever afterward recovered by the owners. The Police Commissioners have never had the nerve to let the aggregate number of burglaries committed in a year, nor the sum total of property lost by theft, be known, and the public have therefore never had anything but the merest guesses on a most important point where they are entitled to, and could easily have perfectly full and reliable statistics. It is impossible to even approximate the truth on this interesting subject, as not one house-robbery in a hundred ever gets to the knowledge of the reporters and through them to the public eye. The Police Commissioners are undoubtedly to blame that the yearly statistics of robberies are not furnished for popular use, but that the facts of a particular robbery are suppressed is not so much the fault of the Police as of the loser. Every citizen naturally has a dread of the fact that a thief has got the best of him becoming generally known, and his first step when applying for Police assistance is to exact a promise that his misfortune shall be kept from the newspapers, and it generally is given and observed. No amount of reportorial industry and enterprise can attain knowledge of crimes which the Police are thus determined to keep from them, and all the cases of house robberies which come to the public ear are those rare instances where the reporters stumble upon them by accident, or those other cases, equally rare, where the depredators are arrested. It will be seen, therefore, that it is entirely useless to give any figures whatever on this subject. There are certainly a number of houses entered every night, as it is certain that confidential reports of several cases are made to Superintendent JOURDAN every morning.

There is not the same reticence displayed as to the general habits and customs of house-sneaks, and any one desiring it can obtain full details as to the several classes of these thieves and their different methods of working. The first point is, of course, to learn where it will pay to break through and steal, and it is in this primary part of their business that the sneaks evince the most patience and adroitness. Experienced thieves rarely venture into a house unless they have the certainty of some reward for their enterprise, and a substantially full and accurate knowledge of its interior. One favorite method of obtaining the desired information is to ingratiate themselves with the servants, who are generally garrulous under proper treatment. Sometimes the thief himself makes a preliminary entry in the day by some mechanical disguise and pretense, but although this device never leads the thief into personal risk, it is sure not to yield the desired information that it is seldom used. The servants are relied upon as equally safe and more productive of the required knowledge. By means of love passages at the area railings with which business or sinecure sort is deftly interlarded, the plausible thief, who is generally of seductive exterior, manages to extract from the susceptible housemaids very exact information as to the plan of the house, the location of the valuables and the habits of the inmates. The latter is always an essential point, and our citizens would be surprised if they knew how intimately the outlaws here acquainted with their movements, especially of their hour for retiring, and whether any of the family are of a nocturnal turn and in the habit of coming in at unseasonable hours, and of the exact date of their departure for the annual sojourn in the country.

Possessed of this valuable information, which only accident can uncover, the sneak hides his time and "beats" the house when all circumstances seem to favor the enterprise. Some lucky negligence may favor him by the servants leaving a door insecurely fastened, as may have been the case with the basement entrance in Madison-avenue on the night of the murder; but in default of this or which he never relies, the sneak has recourse to either the "second story," the "coal hole," or the "panel lay." The first method is of comparatively recent origin, and supervened upon the "catable lay," which was a simple but dangerous way of carrying off the silver-ware on the dining-room table. Two confederates sauntered through a street until they chanced upon a house where the basement door was ajar and the table ready for a meal. One mounted the steps and rang the front door-bell. While the servant went up to answer the questions about some myth-ical resident of the neighborhood, the other slipped in, swept the silver-ware from off the table under his coat, and his walking unconcernedly off was the signal for his confederate to beg pardon for the trouble he had given, and go off in the same fashion, but in another direction. The "second-story lay" has supplanted this primitive style, and, it seemingly more dangerous, it is also more remunerative. In this case, as in all house robberies, there is at least two in the "job," one being an "outside plant," or observer, to give warning of approaching danger to his "pal" within. The one who works the house climbs up by the projections of the ledge stoop to the second-story window, and if he finds it fastened, which is seldom, has no difficulty in pushing back the catch with a little thin, but exceedingly strong knife, made for the purpose, and once within, he is so quick and stealthy in all his movements that he rarely fails to secure and stow away in the pockets of his rear-drawers and closets in search of jewelry and money, which he secures and departs as he came, sliding to the street in an instant by means of a long and exceedingly strong cord which he passes around the frame of the shutter so that it extends in a double to the ground, and pulling it down after him, he and his "pal" are away out of sight in a moment after he has begun his descent. Nearly all of the late affairs where the persons robbed insisted they had been despoiled by servants because no signs of violence could be detected upon the house have been done by "second-story sneaks."

The subterranean sneak now resorts to the coal-hole for his entrance is less adventurous than his brother scoundrel, and must include in the paraphernalia of his trade a good dark lantern and a plentiful supply of matches. He goes through the cellars, and if he finds the door to the upper floor unfastened he is modest to the extremity of bursting it open. Once reaching the upper part of the house his proceedings are like those of the second-story sneaks, except that whereas the latter never take anything but jewelry and watches, the former, having a more substantial way of egress, carries off the piece if he can get it, and even wearing apparel. The same is true of the panel sneak, who is a low order of burglar, as he gets in by bursting out a panel of a rear door.

"Beating the counter," is the latest idiomatic phrase of rascaldom, and implies the robbing of houses where the occupants are absent in the country, and designates a distinctive branch of the thieving art. In this case violence is never used to effect an entrance, and once within, the thieves proceed with the utmost deliberation. They have been known to pass days in such house, subsisting meantime on supplies brought from without, and, for an element of safety, when there is one, leaving every night of their stay they remove property from the house until they have despoiled it of all pictures, plate, and everything portable that was of value. One case is known where these daring marauders carried away every article of furniture in a large and elegantly furnished house by throwing it open in broad daylight, and bringing furniture vans to the front door, as if a legitimate movement were in progress. Thus, in fact, they place but a great city like New-York, where nobody knows or cares anything about his neighbor, in a position to which the London burglar, with all his audacity, has never, indeed, been equaled, but as for such portable matters as plate and small articles of vertu or statuary and pictures, our citizens had better have thrown them into the River than have them in their houses when they go into the country for weeks.

All outlaws are alike in their proceedings when furtively within inhabited houses. They are anxious beyond all things else, to escape contact with any of the inmates, and there is no case upon record where they did not run away, or attempt to run away, at the first warning that they had disturbed any person in the house, and their adroitness in escape is perfectly marvelous, or such affairs as the Nathan murder would cease to be shocking because of their frequency. The sneaks are ready, if brought to bay, to sacrifice anything or anybody for the sake of escape, and have never, under such circumstances, hesitated for a moment to do or attempt murder. Some of them are men hanging on the verge of honest life by following some mechanical trade, and are entirely unknown to the Police as criminals, and the belief in many acute minds that it is among this class, technically known as "duffers," that the Nathan murderer would be found, was occasioned by the unnecessary brutality displayed. The thief, it was argued, coming in contact with Mr. NATHAN near the gaslight, and unaware of that gentleman's defective vision, thought he was recognized, and after knocking him down deliberately hacked and beat life out of him as his only means of escape. The "dog," which it is now deemed a fit moldering clamp," is cited as additional proof of this hypothesis, but however all this may be, it is certain that we are encompassed in our sleeping hours by crafty, cruel criminals, ready to purchase impunity by butcheries that would appal barbarians.

THE PULPIT.

Sermon on Generosity by Rev. Robert Collyer, of Chicago.

Rev. ROBERT COLLYER, of Chicago, preached at the Unitarian Church of the Messiah, in Park-avenue, yesterday morning, to a large congregation. His subject was "Generosity," the text of his discourse being Exodus, thirty-sixth chapter and fifth verse:

"They spake unto Moses, saying, The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work which the Lord commanded to make."

What they had to make was a tabernacle, the most sacred thing that could be made by human hands. The tabernacle and the flag of our country, said the preacher, might be compared one with the other in some sense. The tabernacle was to the Jews the rallying point of faith, as was our national standard, in the late civil war, the rallying point of patriotism, and the fountain of inspiration. The tabernacle was to shadow forth the earnestness of the people's faith, wherein the best they had was to show how deep was their religious feeling. In our own country we are laying the foundation of a grand future, and every man should feel how necessary it is that we should build these foundations broad and strong—that we should put upon them institutions devoted to the worship of God, to learning, and to human succor of every kind. It is necessary, too, that every man should feel that this work depends on a great measure upon himself. This falling back on men's happy memories for one Stewarts, the Astors and the Vanderbilts—when great charitable needs are to be satisfied, is all wrong, and is practically a species of pauperism, of which we ought to be as much ashamed as we are of any other and meaner sort. The difficulty among men now is that the great majority of them fall into the fatal tendency to absorb for themselves all of God's blessings and to give out none. Personal extravagance is the great curse of the times. Young men dare not marry nowadays, because they dare not undertake to supply all the demands of a wife in this fashionable and extravagant age. What are a good home and a happy family in the eye of a young man, in these times, to the cigars, the fine clothes, the theatre and opera tickets that he enjoys while a bachelor? Or what, to a young lady, is it to be simply and sweetly wedded to the man she loves, managing her house and building up that noblest type of home—English or New-England grafted on the West—compared with all the silks and jewels and the fripperies and follies in which she indulges as a maiden? Or, if we are wedded, and have that noble chance of illustrating in our home life the simplicity and grace together that can shine in every home—and, thank God, do shine in so many—there is still the eternal danger of ostentation and luxury, eating away our comfort and our peace, until we are as splendid and as miserable as Solomon in all his glory, and have to say, "I cannot afford it" to the very pleadings of the angels from Heaven.

One of the great evils of this age, too, is the desire we almost universally have to save large fortunes for our children. Such saving seldom does the children any good. Very few of the great men of our Republic—men who have made their mark in our history—were the sons of wealthy parents. Most men who have made what we are, as a nation, sprang from the humbler classes of society. I do not remember, said Mr. COLLYER, a single instance of any writer who has recorded his thanks that he was born to a great fortune. I do not know a single preacher of the most commanding power, of the English race, who was not the son of a man in very moderate circumstances. Certainly this is true of men like Luther, Fox, Bunyan, Wesley, Spurgeon, Parker, Beecher, Bellows and Robertson. The grandest powers of heart and soul, the inspiration and life of the world, very seldom force their way through great riches. It was the old Greek fable that, to renew their life, the gods must touch the earth. I think it was the Greek way of telling us, in a parable, how essential touching the earth must be to all that is godlike. It is a great hindrance in some men to a noble giving that they want to save so much for their children, and it is sadly proved that such savings are not always a profitable inheritance. The last hindrance to generosity I can mention is the greenback paralysis, which comes from a gradual paralysis of the power to give, where the power to get has grown into a mighty strength. It is to be observed in some persons all through their useful years, that getting wealth, instead of developing a corresponding generosity, works just the other way. Every man is in danger of this paralysis who is growing rich, but is not maintaining a steady balance between what he is receiving from the good Providence and what he is giving for providential improvement of his things. One passion to accumulate master the power to dispense, and no man knows where it may land him. Pitifully, then, the soul cries from behind its great prison bars of gold. "The good I would, that I do not, and the evil I would not, that I do." To remedy this state of things, it must be known and felt that riches are riches only as they come to us for the holiest uses. God gives you five talents that he may get ten back again, as the farmer, trusting a bushel of corn to a piece of rich land, has a right to feel that he has not got his own if one bushel in May does not bring him ten in October. The gift that is in me, out of which grows my fortune, is God's gift, and I am God's free agent to use it. It is a vast inspiration to a just generosity to be sure of that, as it turns the steel chain around my purse into a silken string. Whatever is noble and good, then, secures my sympathy, and, so far as it is wise for me to do so, my assistance. Then I do not appear before Him, at last, with a lot of unused treasure—a talent in a napkin, but giving my account, hear the good "Well done." That is the great help to a just generosity. What I have is only mine to use wisely and well for God. Good wages for myself, fair provision for those that belong to me, what is right for my business, everything that is generous the Master will allow; but then He will see that my trust of wealth and power shall be put to noble uses; or else He will say, "Thou unfaithful servant." Those who give right along with a just generosity for good and noble things are the happiest people on the planet. There can be no doubt of this. I cannot say whether they are so generous because they are sunny-hearted; or sunny-hearted because they are generous; but the two things do go together, and they seldom or never go alone. The last great help to give—the most sacred and holy of all—is the example of our Divine Master, whose glorious giving appeared in human form. He gave all He had, and then He gave Himself. Or, as Paul more beautifully expresses it: "Though He was rich, yet, for our sakes, He became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be made rich." He kept nothing to Himself. There he stands forever, the great pattern, the inspiration and life of all noble giving; so perfect, that if His example could be felt and understood in Christendom, this old cry would be heard again from every Godlike and Christ-like institution—from all true charities, and hospitals, and asylums and libraries—from all things that stand for God and His work. "The people" being much more than enough for the service." We should have to hold people back from giving; so guard our institutions from the overflow of treasure, as the low lands of the Mississippi have to be guarded from the waters.

Foolish and Unlearned Questions Avoided—Sermon by Rev. Dr. Westcott.

Rev. Dr. ISAAC WESTCOTT, pastor of the Plymouth Baptist Church, in West Fifty-first-street, preached a sermon on the above subject yesterday morning, to what might be termed a large audience, considering the state of the weather. In the course of his remarks he enumerated several questions which it would seem to be profitable for each one of ourselves to propound to themselves or to others. Less than a century ago the high Calvinistic divines taught the doctrine that men ought to be possessed of such Christian resignation as to be willing to be damned eternally if God so ordained it. That eminent preacher and learned scholar, Dr. HOPKINS, who flourished in New-England less than a hundred years ago, inculcated the dogma that one could not be a Christian unless he could answer the question, "Are you willing to be sent to hell?" in the affirmative. For more than thirty years, however, he did not believe that doctrine had been preached to any pulpit in this country. All such questions as, What do you think of the doctrine of saints' perseverance, or the doctrine of election? were, he thought, both foolish and unprofitable when put to candidates for admission to the Church. Well-meaning Christians sometimes put the mistaken notion into their hearts that they are unconverted, and have no solid foundation on which to rest their hopes for Heaven, unless they can truthfully and cheerfully exclaim: We are ready to die this minute; ready to have all our children removed by the hand of death; ready to lose all our worldly goods, and willing to be damned ourselves, if such be the Lord's will. A lady member of his Church, whom all regarded as a most pious and humble follower of Christ, once told the speaker that she did not think she was converted, because she did not feel willing to abandon home and country and kindred and spend the rest of her life as a missionary among the heathen in foreign climes. He asked that sister if she felt as though she had been called of the Lord to enter the missionary field. She replied, no, she did not believe God designed her for such labor. The speaker undertook to show her that God's grace was given to Christians when it was needed and not before. It was not a mark of a true disciple to be willing to give up children, or riches, or country until the Lord's time had come, and when it did come, then the Almighty Father would be a strength and a refuge in the day of trouble.

REAL'S FUNERAL

The Procession Yesterday—Large Attendance of Social Organizations—Long Display of Carriages—Scenes and Incidents.

The funeral of JOHN REAL, who was hanged on Friday last for the murder of Policeman SMEDICK, took place, yesterday afternoon, and was attended by a large and significant demonstration. A small frame building on the east side of Third-avenue, near the upper corner of One Hundred and Fifth-street, Harlem, the residence of REAL'S brothers-in-law, PATRICK MCCAULY and THOMAS HUGHES, was the objective point of the numerous crowd which took part in the funeral procession. A cursory view of the house showed that the ground-floor was used as an ice-cream and soda-water saloon, but this part was kept shut during the day, and a little piece of paper appeared on one of the shutters, containing the usual announcement. "Closed in consequence of a death in the family." There was nothing in this or in the strips of black and white ribbon which were observable on the door on the right side of the saloon leading to the apartments above to explain the excitement which prevailed around the building. The conversation which was carried on among the knots of people who occupied the streets and sidewalks in the vicinity indicated, however, that they were present for the purpose of participating in the funeral of "JOHNNY" REAL, as he was familiarly called by some. As 1 o'clock, the time announced for the ceremony drew nigh, the streets in the neighborhood commenced rapidly filling with a dense concourse, which soon made foot and vehicular transit very difficult. The female sex was freely represented among the assemblage, both by adults and children, all of whom were expectantly awaiting the start of the funeral procession. Vehicles of every description were halted in the avenue and along the adjacent streets. Many of the spectators were engaged in disavowing the offense for which REAL suffered death, and expressed a great variety of opinions in regard to his execution. Several men said REAL'S death was a political murder, and charged the Tammany Hall party with having been the cause of it. Others thought he should have been allowed the brief respite which his clerical consolers petitioned for. One individual whose knowledge of law seemed very confused, gave utterance to the remark that it was an outrage to punish men like REAL with death, when highway robbers were only sent to State Prison. The Governor came in for a good share of abuse during the funeral comments, but there was a strong, although cautiously expressed, opinion in his favor, his adherents claiming that he had acted just right in the case. The conduct of a certain morning newspaper, which commenced by denouncing REAL, and afterward came out in his behalf, was widely criticised. Previous to the formation of the procession, the body of REAL was deposited in one of the rooms in the house of his brothers-in-law. It was handsomely encased in a rosewood casket and was covered with choice flowers. The corpse was attired in the same in which REAL was hanged. It was found necessary about 1 o'clock to remove the casket to the sidewalk in front of the dwelling, in order to give the friends of the deceased and the multitude generally an opportunity of viewing the remains. After this sad duty had been performed, the casket was screwed up and was subsequently placed in the hearse. The procession then commenced its march down Third-avenue. One distressed spectator remarked, beholding it thus: A few private citizens had died in this City whose loss, if measured by the number of people and carriages which attended their funerals, was more extensively mourned than JOHN REAL'S. There were twenty-one organizations in line at the procession, numbering between 6,000 and 7,000 men. There were also 100 carriages, according to the announcement of one person who took the trouble to make the count. It was apparent, however, that the procession was merely a political demonstration, and that, beyond the sympathy of a few relatives and other friends of the deceased, it was devoid of any genuine heartfelt sorrow at the tragic death of REAL. It was pronounced to be a movement on the part of the "Young Democracy" for the purpose of making capital against Tammany Hall. Sheriff O'BRIEN was reported to be among the gentlemen who visited the residence of REAL'S brothers-in-law during the forenoon, but whether this was true or not could not be ascertained. The route along which the procession moved, extended through Third-avenue to Thirty-fourth-street, and thence to Hunter's Point Ferry. The streets and sidewalks for the whole distance were compactly lined with spectators, and the windows of the houses were also fairly alive with human forms. After leaving the ferry on the Long Island side, the solemn cortege proceeded to Calvary Cemetery, when REAL'S body was deposited in its last resting-place. Previous to the burial mass was said over the remains. It was the wish of the relatives that the funeral take place from a church, but this was found to be impossible, in consequence of a canon of the Catholic Church which does not allow such a ceremony to be held in a church on the Sabbath.

The procession was led by Robertson's Band, playing funeral dirges. Following the latter were the hearse, together with the pall-bearers, including Messrs. JOHN COURTIER, WM. FITZGERALD, JNO. MCLEAN, MICHAEL KENNE, CHAS. H. SMITH, JOHN CLENNAN, EDWARD MULLIN and JOHN COTTRELL. The above were members of the Tenth New-York Volunteer Regiment, with which REAL was connected during the late war. The remainder of the procession was composed of carriages and of mourners on foot, representing different organizations. The pedestrians each wore a small cloth badge on their coats, on which was inscribed the name of their respective organizations, together with the motto, "We mourn our loss." The following is a list of the organizations which participated in the funeral: James O'Brien Association, 1,000 strong, MICHAEL GOOD, Marshal; Sylvan Star Social Club, 100 members, PHILIP COMISKY, President; Friendship Boat Club, 100 strong, JAMES MCCONNELL, President; Amity Social Club, 100 strong; ——— Social Association of the Twenty-first Ward, 150 strong, PATRICK CARVEY, President; Gotham Social Club, 250 strong, WM. J. HILL, President; Oscola Club, 300 strong, JAS. HEARING, President; Mohawk Association, 150 strong, JOHN DORAN, President; Sixth Ray Social Club, 100 strong, JAMES A. LEWIS, President; Keystone Social Club, 175 strong, JAMES O'HARA, President; Young Men's Independent Central Association, 275 strong, ROBERT COLLINS, President; Thomas Booth Association, 150 strong, E. H. KILLIAN, President; Third-avenue Association, 500 strong, JOHN DUFFY, President; ——— Twenty-second Ward Social Club, 175 strong, JOHN ———, President; Volunteer Hose Company, No. 51, 85 strong, JAMES GILLESPIE, President; Knickerbocker Engine Association, 250 strong, DENNIS LEARY, President; Allerton Association, 115 strong, GEORGE SIMMONS, President; Tradesmen's Engine Company, No. 37, 300 strong, JOHN TOOMEY, President; Fire-fly Social Club, 200 strong, JOHN O'BRIEN, President; Matamora Pleasure Club, 100 strong, PATRICK KELLY, President; East River Social Club, 150 strong, MARTIN HOOLOHAN, President.

Effects of the Heat.

The heat, yesterday, in the middle of the day was quite excessive, but the number of sudden deaths and prostrations reported by the Police were surprisingly few. There was, however, more of the time a good breeze stirring, so that if the persons called into the streets by business or pleasure kept in the shade they were not only safe but comparatively comfortable. The following are the only casualties reported:

An unknown man, about thirty-three years of age, was found insensible from the effects of heat in First-avenue, near Thirty-fourth-street, and was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

WILLIAM MUNKERMANN, of No. 128 Norfolk-street, was prostrated in the street, and was taken to the Twenty-first Precinct Station-House, where he recovered and left for home.

JOHN FOSTER, a German, living in Seventy-first-street, near Eighth-avenue, is reported by the Thirtieth Precinct Police as having been found in One Hundred and Twelfth-street, near Broadway, suffering from heat and starvation. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

YACHTING.

The Great Race Today—Fine Sport Anticipated—Yachtmen Anxious for the Results.

The great race for the Queen's Cup, which comes off today in the Lower Bay, will be a glorious event in the annals of American yachting. Thousands of people will no doubt be present on the occasion, and the contest will be one of unequaled excitement among yachtmen. Very little betting has taken place, in consequence of the large number of first-class schooners which have been entered for the race, and the uncertainty about the result. All of the yachts are in splendid trim, and some fast sailing is anticipated. Yachtmen are deeply absorbed in the race, and will not get over their excitement until the result is ascertained. The list of entries was given complete in yesterday's TIMES. It is almost certain that the Dauntless will be among the contestants, as well as the two other equally well-known yachts, the Americus and Cambria.

A large fleet of pleasure steamers will accompany the race, and the spectacle will be the most brilliant ever witnessed in the bay. The Plymouth Rock will be withdrawn from the Long Branch route for the day, and will leave Pier No. 28 North River, foot of Murray-street, at 8 A. M.; foot of Thirty-fourth-street, North River, at 9½ A. M., touching at the lower landing of the Staten Island Ferry before and after the race.

The Pleasant Valley leaves her pier, foot of Spring-street, North River, at 9½ A. M.; Pier No. 24, (Peck-slip,) at 10 A. M., and foot of Montague-street, Brooklyn, at 10½ A. M.

The Magenta will leave Thirty-fourth-street, North River, at 8¾ A. M.; foot of Christopher-street, North River, at 9 A. M.; Pier No. 4 North River, at 9½ A. M., and Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, at 10 A. M.

The Granite State will leave Pier No. 21 North River, foot of Fulton-street, at 9½ A. M.

The Norwalk will leave for Coney Island Point, from West Tenth-street, at 9:30, and Warren-street, at 9:45.

The General Sedgwick will leave Vestry-street at 9¼, and Cedar-street at 9¾.

The Nellie White will leave foot of East Fifty-seventh-street at 10¼, and Market-street at 11.

The Newsmith will leave Warren-street at 8, Thirty-fourth-street, North River, at 8½, and Christopher-street, North River, at 9.

The Palisade will leave Morton-street at 8, Warren-street at 8½, Morris-street, Jersey City, at 9.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

On Saturday night MICHAEL RUSSELL was arrested by Officer COOPER, while endeavoring to steal a gold watch from the person of CHARLES SHOENWING, as he lay asleep on the stoop of No. 40 Forsyth-street. He was brought up at the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday, and committed for examination.

PETER MCGARRICK was put forward at the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday, before Judge SCOTT, on a charge of highway robbery. It appears that late on Saturday a man named HENRY GUIER, a fish peddler, was proceeding toward his residence, No. 120 Orchard-street, when the prisoner approached him and presenting a revolver at his head, demanded his money. GUIER instantly dashed the pistol from the hand of his assailant, and crying for assistance, attracted the attention of an officer who secured the prisoner's arrest. He was held for examination.

Yesterday, in broad day-light, a gentleman was traveling in a Third-avenue car, and as it was proceeding along the Bowery some sneak-thief put his hand through the open window, by which the gentleman was sitting, and stole a Panama hat which he was wearing, and in a moment was lost. Although it was no laughing matter for the late wearer, yet the trick caused some fun and amusement as the loser wended his way to the nearest hatter.

MARY O'BRIEN, sixty years of age, living at No. 337 East Twenty-second-street, last evening fell in front of the Eighteenth Precinct Station-house, dislocating her wrist. She was sent to Bellevue Hospital.

MARY DUNN, fourteen years of age, residing on Fifteenth-street, between Tenth and Eleventh avenues, was shot in the arm, while on the street, yesterday morning, by some unknown person.

LONG ISLAND.

On Saturday, the Flushing Town-dock at Whitestone, was purchased by ROBERT PECK, Esq., for JAMES UDELL, who it is understood has purchased it in the interest of the Flushing and North-side Railroad. The price paid was $1,200. The railroad company, through their directors, have voted to extend the track to the dock, as was foreshadowed in a recent article in the TIMES. The extension will only be a half mile in length, and when completed (which will be in the course of the month) the Jim Fisk line of steamers will stop at Whitestone Dock, and a special train running in connection with the boats will be put on the route. Time from Hunter's Point to Whitestone, fifteen minutes. The ferry, between Westchester and Whitestone, shortening the route between the former place and the City thirty minutes; is not yet an established fact, although during the past week prominent parties from Westchester have been in consultation with the railroad authorities. The number of passengers carried over the road for the month of July was 20,400; number of freight cars transported during the month, 1,078; number of times trains ran behind time, none; number of persons injured or killed, none.

Saturday the dummy which was procured to run on Atlantic-avenue, Brooklyn, between South Ferry and East New-York, but which could not be used on account of the objection of property-owners on the avenue, was placed on the part of the old Flushing road between Hunter's Point and Windsor, purchased by the South-side Railroad Company. Twenty trips will be made each way; commencing at 5½ A. M. from Windsor, and the last car crossing Hunter's Point at 10:27 P. M. Stops are made at Calvary Cemetery, Penny Bridge and Maspeth.

The forty-third annual Queens County Harvest-home Festival will be held at the Bay Side House, (CROCHERON'S,) Thursday afternoon and evening, Aug. 11, and if the day is unpleasant the first clear day. Two large bands will be present, to dispense music. The efforts of Mr. CROCHERON to make the coming festival the most attractive ever held are seconded by a large committee of gentlemen, representing all parts of the county.

At the Merrick Camp-meeting, on Saturday morning, Rev. J. F. HEADLEY preached from the text, Isaiah 44, viii: "Ye are now my witnesses." At 2 P. M. the discourse was delivered by H. S. PLATT. In the evening, Rev. J. CLARK, of Freeport, preached. Yesterday, the programme was somewhat changed, and in the forenoon a Love Feast was held. Rev. JAMES [illegible], D. D., preached the afternoon sermon, and J. FEGG, Jr., the evening discourse. On Saturday, large numbers arrived, intending to spend the Sabbath at Camp-meeting and return Monday. The attendance yesterday was very large, exceeding that of any previous day, most of those arriving coming from the surrounding country. Everything was quiet on the ground, and no disturbance, or more orderly concourse of people never assembled.

It is proposed to extend Myrtle-avenue in Flushing village, to Bayside, a distance of about two and one-sixth miles, making the road 75 wide and joining Brodist-avenue, now laid out at Bayside. All but one of the property owners through which the proposed road runs, have signified their willingness to give the land necessary for the improvement.

Schooner Samuel Reiber, lying at Kelly's Dock, Hunter's Point, foot of Ninth-street, was run into about 4 o'clock by the tug James Johnson, which was coming down the river. It is supposed that the pilot was asleep at the time.

The Board of Supervisors of Suffolk County, have voted to increase the salary of the County Judge from $1,200 to $1,500 per year; also the salary of the District-Attorney from $800 to $900 per year. They also decided to locate the new County Poor-house at Yaphank.

The telegraph wires are to be extended to Sag Harbor, via the Branch Road. Poles have already been distributed, and are now being put up.

Two valuable cattle were killed by lightning in the recent thunder-storm at Huntington, belonging to G. W. BAGGS.

NEW-JERSEY.

Early yesterday morning, a crowd of a dozen or more men who had been drinking together all the previous evening, became engaged in a general fight, in a liquor-store on the corner of Steuben and Prospect streets, Jersey City. Chairs and glasses and other articles flew promiscuously across the room, but before much damage had been done the Police arrived and arrested JOHN COUGHLIN, PATRICK BRAL, JOHN CAMPBELL, WILLIAM CRAMER, JAMES MOODY and PATRICK GOGGINS, and marched them to the Station-house, where they were locked up, to await an examination. The rest of the belligerents made their escape.

The following charitable institutions receive bequests under the will of the late HENRY WEIBEL, of Haddenfield, N. The following gentlemen are stated to be candidates for the Republican nomination for Congress in the Second New-Jersey District: Ex-Gov. WM. A. NEWELL, of Monmouth; Hon. S. A. DOBBINS and Dr. RUSH, of Burlington; John Taylor, Frederick Kingman, Robert O. Belleville, Gen. JAMES F. RUSLING, Hon. A. O. ARCHER and E. G. GREEN, of Mercer, and Ex-Senator GEO. E. HOMER, of Ocean. The real contest is expected to be between NEWELL, DOBBINS and RUSH, with the chances in favor of the former. The Democrats will probably renominate Gen. HAIGHT, the present incumbent.

Saturday night, a man named DANIEL FARREL was arrested for committing an almost deadly assault on the wife of F. FITZSIMMONS, No. 10 Van Buren-street, Newark, she being in a very delicate condition at the time. In a drunken fit he entered the house, took her by the hair, dragged her into the street, where he kicked and stamped on her till she presented a most pitiable sight, being terribly bruised from head to foot. The arrival of assistance for the woman, she asserts, only saved her life, which would have been sacrificed as it was, had she not been a woman of great force of endurance, and of much more than ordinary constitution. FARREL has been committed for trial.

The steamer Magenis made her regular trip from Newark to Rockaway and return yesterday, and carried a thousand passengers, and among them were three rowdies, named JAMES FLANAGAN, JAMES CARSON and CHARLES MALONEY, who attempted to get up a fight on the boat, much to the disturbance and disgust of respectable passengers. The officers of the boat, who are determined this shall be broken up, called on Detective HAGERTY, who was on board, who arrested them and the officers engaged in disarming them with riot clubs. They will be examined to-morrow.

In the twenty-four hours, including Sunday, there were about thirty arrests made by the Police, the prisoners being charged with all conceivable crimes below murder.

Most of the principal churches in Newark are now without pastors, and the congregations yesterday were very meagre, the people as well as the pastors being in the enjoyment of their annual vacation.

A man named JOHNSON ROLLIN was arrested in Trenton, on Saturday, charged with being the person who knocked down and robbed WILLIAM ELLIS, in State-street, Trenton, a few days ago. The evidence against him is strong, and he has been committed for trial.

The Trenton horse railroad is to be extended about half a mile out to Calhoun and Spring streets.
